News From the East Yes, You Can Mix Them The Big Terrapin Race $1,000,000 Russian Plane

News from the East interests Americans; they might have to pay the bill. Japan and Russia, supposed recently to be on the verge of war, are said to have an understanding about things in the East that would involve depriving the British of profitable locations and rights. This does not please Britain, but that is the business of Japan, Russia and England.

When Americans read "17 ships of U. S. fleet arrive at Nanking," with other American ships beside the 17, destroyers, submarines, and supply ships, on the way, they should think a little.

What is our great interest out there? The United States does not depend upon Chinese, Japanese or other Oriental trade. This is a self-sufficient nation, thank heaven, not like England, a small island unable to live on what it produces.

Are those United States ships sent by Anglo-maniacs to pull somebody's chestnuts out of the fire?

The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, speaking in Detroit to 5000 of his followers, was annoyed by a gentleman from Kansas, who climbed on the platform and threw feathers on Father Coughlin crying, "You can't mix religion and politics."

Instantly he learned that he was mistaken. Father Coughlin seized him by the neck, added a little physical persuasion, stretched him on the floor, not too gently. Father Coughlin, having solved the feather problem, shouted into the microphone to his followers, "Don't touch that man." Had the police not seized him, and protected him, he might hardly have escaped with his life.

The feather-thrower, who calls himself "Chief Pow-Pow," had to admit that you can "mix politics with religion."

On Wednesday next Lepanto, Arkansas, will enjoy its annual terrapin race. The terrapin, some may not know it, is a small turtle, highly expensive, for which the meat and bones of the muskrat are sometimes substituted with imitation yellow terrapin eggs added.

The crowds that watch the race prove that human beings can be interested in almost anything that temporarily competition and is not useful. The race track is 200 yards on Main street, paved off at the sides. Terrapins put in the middle of the course may go whichever way they like. The one reaching either end of the race track first, wins. Last year's champion from Memphis won in fast time, 59 minutes, a speed of about a mile in four hours.

It might add to the excitement, interest and gambling enthusiasm if this terrapin idea could be tried on race tracks for horses and dogs. It must become tiresome for spectators at such events to see the animals always going in the same direction, and their money going with them.

Interesting flying item: Russia orders in Baltimore, a passenger "Clipper" plane, to cost $1,000,000, and carry 44 passengers besides a crew of nine.

The plane, very fast, can go 4000 miles without taking on fuel, a range that would bring it across the Atlantic nicely, if it ever wanted to come back with a load of explosives instead of passengers.

Metropolitan Life and other life insurance actuaries say "106 years is man's age limit," not more than 50 out of every 1,000,000 of us reach that limit. Another great authority has said positively that no human being has ever lived beyond 110 or 115.

Actuaries and scientists know statistics but cannot tell you what will happen.

The Venetian nobleman Luigi Cornaro, given up to die at forty because of his unhealthy living, changed his methods and diet, ate only twelve ounces of solid food with a dozen eggs and two wine daily, wrote his book when past ninety and lived beyond one hundred, ending horseback until 100 years old.

His case is authentic; Bacon and many others refer to it and Burton devotes to it his "Anatomy of Melancholy."

Man, like other mammals, should live at least ten times as long as it takes them to reach the age of reproduction. Some, like the horse, live twenty times as long. On that basis man's lower life limit would be 150 years with a higher limit of 300 years. Three hundred years might be too long; 150 about right.—75 years to get an education, then 75 more to enjoy it.

MISSING N.H. WOMAN SLAIN; KILLER LEADS WAY TO BODY

G-Man Purvis Relates:

'Little Bohemia' Bandit Battle

Traded Pistol Shots With Baby-Face Nelson

Melvin Purvis, chief of U. S. Department of Justice "G-men," in the opening installment of his own story in yesterday's Boston Sunday Advertiser, told how feverish nation-wide chase of "Public Enemy No. 1" was started by a telephone tip. In today's absorbing narrative, the captor of John Dillinger tells how he traded shots with "Baby Face" Nelson.

By MELVIN PURVIS

We started. The journey to Little Bohemia will always stand out in my memory. The roads were bad, and the night was wretchedly cold. The cars were driven at a reasonable distance from each other so as not to arouse suspicion on the part of the countryside.

MELVIN PURVIS

Things started happening. The commandeered cars were not the best in the world, and before half the distance had been covered two of them broke down.

The eight men in them were forced to stand on the running-boards of the three remaining cars, holding their rifles and shotguns as well as they could, and also holding on to the speeding cars for their lives.

Our weapons had been divided up so that each car would contain a machine-gun, a rifle, a shotgun, teargas equipment, and of course the shortarms of each Special Agent.

Finally, our guide informed us that we were about two miles from Little Bohemia. I called a halt. All lights were extinguished, and instructions were issued that no one should smoke. We proceeded slowly through the crowded timber and the chill darkness.

Little Bohemia is located about 400 yards off the main highway, in the center of a wild hunting and fishing section. A single driveway leads to it from the main road.

The lodge itself is built of rustic logs, and is surrounded on the front and two sides by crowded timber and at the rear by a lake. On the right side, there are a series of small cottages, in which guests can be quartered.

We drew up at the entrance of the driveway, and parked two cars across it in a V-shape position, so that any flight attempted in that direction would be impeded.

The men, swinging their chilled arms and rubbing their numbed hands, made ready their weapons in silence. There were a few whispered orders.

MOTHER OF 5 IS CLUBBED TO DEATH

Wilton, N. H., Oct. 19 — The battered body of Mrs. Rosanna M. Gilman, missing Peterboro mother of five, was found today on the side of Temple Mountain, near here, half buried under a pile of leaves.

It was found within a short time after Carl Barrett, 28, also of Peterboro, had been questioned in the police station at Milford and confessed to having murdered her, police said.

According to authorities, Barrett himself led them to the scene. Without hesitation the grief-crazed man walked directly to the spot where the body lay, half-hidden and said:

"There."

And "there" it was.

Why Mrs. Gilman was slain is yet to be revealed. Barrett, according to Sheriff Richard M. O'Dowd, said the motive was not robbery and the woman's pocketbook was reported to have been found near her grave of leaves.

The man had been on exceptionally friendly terms with the woman, the sheriff declared. Barrett told him Mrs. Gilman was estranged from her husband.

According to the official version of the statements attributed to Barrett, the young man, it seems,

WARRANT OUT FOR FRAUD PROBER

A fugitive from justice warrant for the arrest of Attorney John A. McArdle of Nahant, chairman of the Massachusetts Insurance Claims Investigation Committee, was issued in municipal court today by Judge A. K. Cohen.

Lieutenant-Inspector George V. Augusta of headquarters applied for the warrant in behalf of the New Haven, Ct., police.

Present when the application was made were Sergeant Raymond Egan and James De Maio, a witness, both of New Haven.

The warrant stated that McArdle is wanted in New Haven "for bribery, attempting to prevent appearance of a witness and obstruction of justice on September 23, 1936."

CHARGES "FRAME-UP"

McArdle was appointed by authority of the supreme court on petition of insurance companies to investigate all fraudulent claims. He figured prominently in disbarment proceedings against Lowell A. Mayberry, Boston lawyer, in 1934.

Charles Riordan, counsel for McArdle, was present when the warrant issued, but his petition for a continuance was disallowed. He said McArdle was "very ill" and, following the reading of the warrant, stated:

"It is a deliberate frame up. This case refers to the investigation in Connecticut of lawyers involved in fraudulent claims arising out of automobile cases.

"Two lawyers were disbarred. Several cases involving other lawyers were taken under advisement.

SAYS CHARGE BASELESS

"McArdle is accused of influencing James De Maio of New Haven, a witness, not to appear at one of the hearings. The accusation is without foundation. This will be shown at a later hearing."

In 1935 McArdle took a very active part in the investigation at New Haven against more than 20 attorneys who allegedly bribed jurors or intimidated witnesses.

At the time he worked under direction of John R. Beach of New Haven, a former member of the Supreme Court, who was appointed as special commissioner to hear the evidence gathered by McArdle.

During the Mayberry disbarment proceedings McArdle was considered the "key man." Much anxiety was held for him at the time when, during the proceedings, he disappeared for five days. Fear had been held for his safety because of alleged threats.

It is understood McArdle will fight extradition.

Amos Pinchot's Statement:

Liberal Leader Tells Why He Can't Back Roosevelt's Socialism

Amos Pinchot, outstanding liberal leader of the country since the Bull Moose days of 1912, broke finally and definitely with President Roosevelt yesterday in an open letter, addressed to Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Pinchot, a lawyer, publicist and brother of Gifford Pinchot, twice governor of Pennsylvania, was an active supporter of President Roosevelt in the 1932 campaign.

Last January, Mr. Pinchot declared President Roosevelt one of our most "unlucky" Presidents, and said a sample of his bad luck was the fact he had selected as his advisers a group of well-meaning Peter Pans, who play in the same backyard with Socialists and Technocrats."

Later, in July last, in an open letter to Felix Frankfurter, Mr. Pinchot wrote as follows:

"I am no longer gambler enough to support the New Deal."

In his letter to Secretary Ickes, Mr. Pinchot unequivocally abandons President Roosevelt and the New Deal.

His letter follows:

Hon. Harold L. Ickes,
Secretary of the Interior,
Washington, D. C.

My Dear Harold: I have had a number of letters lately, some of them from old friends, asking me to support Mr.

LANDON ASKS SHOWDOWN ON NRA

By WILLIAM R. HUTCHINSON

Aboard Landon Sunflower Special, En Route to Los Angeles, Oct. 19 (INS) — Speeding west, confident that he will be elected November 3, Governor Alfred M. Landon again vigorously challenged President Roosevelt to tell whether or not he is determined to re-establish the outlawed National Recovery Administration.

En route for a major address in Los Angeles, Wednesday night, Landon will turn east the next morning for a transcontinental trip ending in New York City, Oct. 28 and 29.

Then he will complete the circle by returning to Topeka, after closing his campaign with a final address in St. Louis Oct. 31.

The fresh Landon challenge was provoked by a statement attributed to James Roosevelt, son of the President, at Gardner, Mass., last Friday, that "the President intends to continue the principles of the NRA by going before the people and seeking an amendment to the Constitution to make the principles of the NRA the law of the land."

While pointing out that the President's son has disputed the ac-

LANDON DEMANDS ROOSEVELT SHOWDOWN ON NRA

HE INSISTS PRESIDENT TELL STAND ON SON'S STATEMENT

curacy of this quotation Landon denied.

"The President must specifically deny his son's views are his views. Otherwise the silence of the father will be a confession that the son spoke for the President when he gave us to understand that his father intended to perpetuate the NRA willy-nilly."

The text of Governor Landon's statement follows:

"Mr. James Roosevelt in an address at Gardner, Mass., on Friday night on behalf of his father's candidacy for re-election to the presidency, made a statement regarding the NRA.

"Here is the version of what young Mr. Roosevelt said, one taken down in shorthand accurately by the press at the time the statement was made, and the other given out by the speaker himself the next day and slightly changed by him some two hours later.

"As to the actual intentions of the President regarding the NRA the two statements are in accurate identity.

"The statement taken from the stenographic record of the Democratic Program reads, as vouched for by Host Jesse Jefferson:

"'If the NRA had not been knocked out we would not have had as much unemployment. The way to correct this is by shorten hours of labor.

"'In order to accomplish this, the President intends to continue the principles of the NRA by going before the people and seeking an amendment to the Constitution to make the principles of the NRA the law of the land.'

SON'S ACCOUNT

"Mr. James Roosevelt's own account of what he said as quoted in the press is as follows:

"'These are the purposes of the NRA. The administration is pledged to attempt to accomplish the purposes of the NRA in every constitutional manner.

"'Should there be no way in which this can be accomplished, which we do not admit, I as an individual see no alternative but to ask the people for the right to make those purposes constitutional through the Congress of the United States.'

"Without attempting to unravel Mr. James Roosevelt's constitutional theories as expressed in the last sentences of his statement (they have a certain New Deal smack about them) this much is clear in both statements, simply that young Roosevelt understands the President still intends to make NRA principles live and operate in our government by one device or another.

"This is precisely what I have charged, over and over again.

"At Portland, Me., on September 17, I said:

"'The NRA was the beginning in America of the movement which, throughout the world, has been sweeping aside private enterprise in favor of governmental control—a movement which has been substituting personal authority for constitutional self-government.

"'But—you may say—the NRA is dead.'

"True enough. The National Industrial Recovery Act is dead, thanks to the courage and integrity of the Supreme Court.

"SPIRIT LIVES ON"

"But the spirit of the 'NRA lives on in the lives of an unwilling electorate.

"The statement taken from the stenographic record of the Democratic Program reads, as vouched for by host Jesse Jefferson:

"SPIRIT LIVES ON"

"But the spirit of the 'NRA lives on in the lives of an unwilling electorate. It lives on in the efforts of the administration to get around the decisions of the Supreme Court. It lives on in this administration's 1936 platform. It lives on in the recent utterances of the President and his spokesmen.

"But, above all, it lives on in the spirit of the President, who has confessed no error—who has let it be clearly known 'that he considered it would be a catastrophe if the American farmer should once more become a lord of his own farm.'

"'If this does not mean that the present administration wants to establish government dominance of industry and agriculture, what does it mean?' If the President has changed his mind and recognizes his error, let him say so. Let him say so in plain language. Until we have such an admission of error, the choice before us is clear.'

"In my address at Detroit on October 13, showing that the actions of the President do not conform with his campaign pledges that he stand for individual enterprise and favors an all-powerful federal government brushing away state rights and home rule, I said:

"'If the President thinks agricultural and industrial anarchy can be prevented only by the reenactment of the principles of NRA and AAA, let him say so.

"'Let him tell us—and tell us before election day—just what amendments to the Constitution he has in mind.

"DODGES ISSUE"

"By his silence on this he is attempting to dodge the fundamental issue of this campaign—the issues of whether he intends to change the form of our government—whether labor, agriculture and business are to be directed and managed by government-directed and managed politics.

"I have declared that being elected, I shall immediately recommend to Congress the repeal of all laws giving autocratic power to the President. I have made it plain that I stand for the maximum of individual liberty consistent with the welfare of all people but with no national economic planning that has the government dominating labor, industry and agriculture instead of exercising the normal governmental service of prevention of unfair practices and oppressions among these activities of the people.

"The President must specifically deny that his son's views are his views. Otherwise the silence of the father will be the confession that the son spoke for the President when he gave us to understand that his father intended to perpetuate the NRA willy-nilly."

What Landon Stands For:

Sane Spending

GOVERNOR LANDON has the "head of the family" attitude TOWARD THE SPENDING OF MONEY.

He does not have to IMAGINE the circumstances under which the average American family lives. He has raised that kind of a family, and has done it successfully BY KEEPING HIS SPENDING WITHIN HIS INCOME.

Mr. Landon does not believe the affairs of the nation can be WISELY ADMINISTERED on any other basis than that assuring the SOUNDNESS of a family budget.

He believes THE BORROWER IS HEADED FOR TROUBLE, whether he is a family man or the HEAD OF A GOVERNMENT.

Borrowing is the first step in reckless spending. BORROWED MONEY LOOKS LIKE EASY MONEY, and is usually as QUICKLY SPENT.

Squandering is bad enough when it is merely wasteful of money already in hand. But when it is necessary TO DIG INTO FUTURE EARNINGS for repayment of money UNWISELY SPENT and also for the interest accrued upon it, THE BURDEN MAY SOON BREAK THE DEBTOR'S BACK.

GOVERNOR LANDON has been a SUCCESSFUL family man because he APPLIES these spending principles to his private affairs. He has been a SUCCESSFUL GOVERNOR of a great State because he refused to spend more of the people's money than was made available to his administration.

He will be a SUCCESSFUL PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, because his administration will RESTRICT ITS SPENDING WITHIN THE CURRENT REVENUES OF THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT.

JIM ROOSEVELT 'SHIFT' URGED BY DEMS

By BERNARD J. DOHERTY

Democratic circles still buzzed today over the "break" made by James Roosevelt, in tipping off the country that a constitutional amendment will be sought to make the principles of the NRA the law of the land.

While the President's son hastened to say he was expressing his own view, the thousands of listeners who have attended his forums throughout the state have been taking it for granted that he is in his father's confidence and a spokesman of the administration.

Young Roosevelt also declared at Fitchburg that Alfred E. Smith, 1928 Democratic nominee, now campaigning for Governor Alfred M. Landon, had laid the foundation for the forward steps in the last three and a half years."

He made the statement in response to a question from the audience as to whether, if the present Administration is re-elected, industry and commerce will cooperate with the principles of the NRA.

Democratic leaders here shy away from any public utterances but it is no secret they would be glad to see "Jimmie" called to some other state.

The younger Roosevelt's re-entrance into Massachusetts politics was a shock to many of the Democratic politicians who had understood that he had re-settled permanently in New York.

PATRONAGE FIGHT

Squabbles over patronage made a breach that has been temporarily glossed over for the appearance of a harmonious campaign front. But the bitterness is still there.

It is pointed out that actually, the party in this state is divided into two groups, state Democrats and Federals, with little love lost between the two.

Congressman Joseph Martin, Jr., Eastern campaign manager for Governor Alfred M. Landon, republican candidate for President, addressing a big rally at Blackstone, declared that the effect Governor Landon's victory on November 3 will have on business is found to be great throughout the country.

BETTER JOBS SEEN

"We expect that it will make it possible to give people more than just a pick and shovel job," he stated.

He denounced the New Deal attitude saying it is "inimical to the best interests of New England."

He pointed to the flood of Japanese imports, as an instance, which is threatening the textile, shoe and jewelry industries in this section.

This New Deal policy, he stressed, is no help to a town whose trade is being swept from him.

Martin predicted that Governor Landon will carry all of the New England states and upper New York by 500,000, "enough to offset the city votes." In Florida, he said, the Republicans have a fighting chance.

Curley in Lodge City; Haigis Here

Democrats Go After Essex

By WILLIAM C. CONWAY

Entering the crucial last two weeks of the campaign, Governor James M. Curley will carry his battle for election to the United States Senate into Beverly, home city of his G. O. P. opponent, Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr.

Curley, State Treasurer Charles F. Hurley and other members of the Democratic State Ticket, will be the principal speakers at a rally scheduled for tonight in the Briscoe School Hall, Beverly.

The Democratic rally committee's rally schedule for tonight will carry the candidates into Republican bailiwicks and Lodge strongholds when they speak in Lynnfield, Peabody, Danvers, Manchester and Gloucester, all of which are located in Essex County.

That Curley realizes he has a stiff battle for the Senate seat has become more apparent during the past few days.

Until last Saturday, Curley had been devoting much of his speeches at rallies throughout the state to a defence of the New Deal and calling for the re-election of President Roosevelt. He paid little attention to his own candidacy.

3000 AT STATLER

However, during the past few days, he has changed his campaign tactics and is devoting more time to his opponents. Representative Lodge and former District Attorney Thomas F. Quinn, mentioned as nominee of the Union party.

Curley has been directing his attack on Lodge in the latter's labor record and to passages of a book written by G. O. P. nominee wrote several years ago.

O'Brien is using the same book and same passages in his battle against Lodge.

Governor Curley was enthusiastically cheered by the women, the majority of them women, who jammed the Hotel Statler ballroom last night to attend a reception given in his honor by his daughter, Mrs. Mary Curley Donnelly.

Mrs. Donnelly won a roundle of applause when she concluded an address in which she called for the election of her father.

Conant Sails Home For Landon Vote

Anxious to cast his vote for Governor Alfred M. Landon, President James Bryant Conant of Harvard has planned to return from his European jaunt the day before election, it was learned today.

President Conant arrives in New York on the S. S. Queen Mary on Monday, November 2. He is registered as a Republican in Ward 7, Precinct 5, of Cambridge.

The Conants sailed for Europe on September 23, also on the Queen Mary, for a brief real following arduous Tercentenary activities. They traveled through England and France.

G. O. P. Rallies For Boston

By L. CONANT, JR.

Highly encouraged over the results of their western "victory swing" the state Republican ticket prepared today for a week of Greater Boston rallies with tonight's engagements climaxed with meetings in Methuen, Haverhill and Peabody.

A significant development of the past week has been the surge of the laboring vote toward the Republican cause. Indicative of this sentiment was the endorsement of Harry Grossman, of Mattapan, lifelong Democrat and past president of Carpenter's Union Local No. 157, A. F. of L., for John W. Haigis, Republican gubernatorial nominee.

Hailing Haigis as a friend of labor, Grossman declared the legislative record of John W. Haigis stands as a beacon light and a champion of labor's cause.

"When labor needed a real friend," he said, "he was never found wanting. I endorse him 100 per cent and urge all my friends in my union as well as in the union unions to do likewise."

ENDORSES LODGE

A similar endorsement was forthcoming from James T. Lyons, recent candidate for state Senate in the Seventh district and a prominent Democrat for more than a quarter of a century. He said in part:

"The time has arrived for all voters, regardless of party affiliation, to love the American form of government, to get behind John W. Haigis for Governor and Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., for senator, and the whole Republican ticket, that out state and Boston may again be governed according to the Constitution and the laws which have made our nation great.

"I urge all independent Democrats to join in this crusade."

A feature of the week's activities will be the dinner at the Boston City Club Auditorium on Wednesday evening, tendered by the Franco-American Civic League of Massachusetts to the state ticket. The arrangements for the dinner are under the direction of Telesphore Le Boeuf, of Webster.

OLD AGE MEASURE

Guest speakers of the evening will be Congressman Joseph W. Martin, Jr., National Committeeman and Eastern director, and Sinclair Weeks, chairman of the Republican State Committee.

Significant development of the past week was the support rendered the Republican cause following the addresses of Lodge and Haigis on social security.

Haigis, declaring that he had voted in favor of the first practical step taken in the state to make the old age assistance law an actuality, asserted that the question of social security has nothing to do with party politics.

"What we are concerned with," he said, "is how to bring it about in an equitable manner.

"It was in 1930, after a careful and exhaustive study of the subject, that Massachusetts enacted its old age assistance law as the direct outcome of the investigation made by the commission which I voted in favor of establishing in 1923."

Roosevelt Plans to Invade Pennsylvania After N. E.

Washington, Oct. 19 (INS) — President Roosevelt returned to the capital today for two busy days on official business before starting out again on his campaign for re-election.

Tomorrow night, Mr. Roosevelt will be off again, this time to doubtful New England.

In two days the President will speak at more than a dozen cities in Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Connecticut, where Republican leaders are counting on a heavy vote for Gov. Alfred M. Landon.

HIS N. E. DRIVE

Leaving Washington Tuesday night, the President will spend Wednesday and Thursday continuously on the move and show himself to many thousands of voters in the hope of winning them over.

His major New England address, which will be broadcast throughout the nation, will be delivered Wednesday night in Worcester. The President said he would discuss the same issues he stressed during his 5000-mile swing through ten western states.

PENNSYLVANIA SPEECH

After this foray into admittedly doubtful territory, the President is likely to revisit Pennsylvania during the final week of the campaign and speak at Harrisburg on the New Deal's labor record.

His only definite engagements for the wind-up week are both in New York city. He will take part in exercises on Oct. 28 commemorating the gift of the Statue of Liberty by France to the United States and close his campaign on Oct. 31, the Saturday night before election, at a rally in Madison Square Garden. Sometime between these two dates the President may make an appearance in Brooklyn.

Unions Call "Holiday" To Hear Roosevelt Talk

New Bedford, Oct. 19 (AP)—The New Bedford textile council, composed of delegates from every labor union in the city, has declared a "labor holiday" for next Wednesday when President Roosevelt visits this city.

According to William E. G. Batty, secretary of the council, the action was taken after mill owners refused a request for a conference relative to closing the mills "so the workers can see and hear a president of the United States."

"They refused to confer with us," Batty said, "after sending us a terse reply that "President Roosevelt is coming here as a candidate for president and not as president of the United States."

Batty said 200,000 workers would stay away from the mills Wednesday "and there will be no making up of the stoppage."

RADIO 'DEBATE' DEFENDED BY VANDENBERG

New York, Oct. 19 (INS)—Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan, in an interview at Republican headquarters today, warmly defended his action Saturday night in broadcasting the "debate" during which he used the recorded voice of President Roosevelt.

The broadcast—characterized as a "debate" by Democrats—has created a political furore. It was carried on some radio stations carried in part on others and cut off from still others.

At the same time, Senator Vandenberg made public a telegram he had sent to George Henry Payne of the Federal Communications Commission at Washington.

In it Vandenberg denied his broadcast was either unethical or disrespectful, and asserted:

"I defy you to identify a single disrespectful word, unless you call it disrespectful to prove a broken pledge."

Senator Vandenberg, in his telegram to Payne, charged that "legitimate" free speech was "infringed" in the cutting off of the broadcast.

The text of his telegram to Payne follows:

"Newspapers report protest filed with you by progressive Roosevelt committee against interrupted Saturday broadcast. These gentlemen perspire at the right time but for the wrong reason. Progressives particularly should perspire at every pore when legitimate free speech is infringed.

"The complaint that someone might have thought Mr. Roosevelt was participating in the broadcast in person is ludicrous. The announcement was clear and specific that he was not present and that his quotations dated back to 1932.

"The vice of the situation is that interference with the broadcast robs the complainants of a chance to know what they are taking about.

"You are quoted in the New York Times this morning as saying the President has a right to use his own voice and his own words.

"Surely we have not yet reached the point where it is unethical to compare specific promises with specific performances in assessing the records of candidates for high public offices.

"The incident is closed as far as I am concerned. But I do not propose to be unethically attacked or submissively to decline a challenge to the Democratic nominee for President of the United States.

"I think my record proves my complete respect for the presidency and my constant devotion to clean politics. In return I ask for fair play and free elections."

Commission to Probe 'Debate' Deletion

Washington, Oct. 19 (AP)—An investigation of complaints against the interruption of a radio "debate" between Senator Vandenberg (R., Mich.) and the recorded voice of President Roosevelt was announced today by Chairman Eugene O. Sykes, of the Federal communication commission's broadcast division.

Commission employes said they had received five protests from individuals after the Vandenberg speech was cut off some of the eastern stations of the Columbia Broadcasting system network Saturday night.

The commission said no complaints have been received from the Republican National Committee, which asked the Columbia System for a re-broadcast.

Protests will receive "the usual thorough study given all complaints," Sykes said. Until the investigation is completed, he added, the commission will make no comment.

SEIZE Sack Victim's ASSETS

STATE HUNTS DEATH CLUES

Seeking a key that will unlock the baffling mystery of Grayce Asquith's murder and dismemberment, Norfolk county authorities today obtained a court order directing them to seize all assets of her estate.

The warrant, issued by Judge Joseph R. McCoole in probate court at Dedham, to Deputy Sheriff Harry Studley, will permit inspection and seizure of the contents of any safe deposit vault that may be located in the name of the Wollsmuth "Merry Widow."

There have been reports for ten days that Mrs. Asquith kept a diary but this has not been found.

The warrant directed a thorough investigation of the assets of Studley, who will work in connection with District Attorney Edmund Dinneen. Dr. Dewing's office and expert drivery to him anything of significance that is turned up.

Samuel L. Baine of Brookline on Saturday had petitioned the court to be appointed receiver.

Other action in the sack mystery today included a search off Squantum for the missing head, arms and torso of the victim, whose legs were found in the harbor two weeks ago today, and a check of the Atlantic ocean waterfront in the city in connection with another clue.

The Squantum search was directed by sergeant Fred Young of Quincy police. Five harbor department employees aided him in dragging the waters and inspecting the shore line of Squantum point.

Boston detectives—including several of the best undercover men of the state police and city department—were assigned to the task of locating and identifying a mysterious 40-foot fishing boat, docked or hauled in under power with a heavy duty engine and having a small cabin set further aft than is usual in such craft.

Tells Story

According to a story told police by a witness whose identity was withheld, a boat answering to this boat made an unexplained trip down harbor in the murky hours before dawn, September 21, a month day after the supposed slaying of Mrs. Asquith in her Alpine road Weymouth cottage.

Said the witness in substance:

"Before I saw the boat go out that Monday morning (September 21), noticed first an automobile with two men in it. They seemed to be looking for some place they didn't know very well.

"They came along Atlantic avenue very slow, looking hard at every pier. Finally they turned onto this wharf I'm telling you about.

"It was kind of funny to see a private auto around the wharf front that time of night. That's how I remembered it. But I didn't pay any special attention.

"Still, I did notice that the men in the auto got out and carried something down to where the green-black fishing boat was tied up.

"Somebody was aboard the boat when these two fellows got there. There was a dim light in the cabin.

"Then, after a little, the boat's engine started. It was a heavy engine. I could tell it again by the sound of it.

"The boat's running lights flashed on after she pulled away from the wharf, but they weren't very bright. I lost her before she'd gone more than a few hundred yards. She was heading down harbor.

"The men who had come in the auto went along aboard the boat, leaving their car on the wharf.

"The car was gone, though, a couple of hours later, when I came back that way. Some fellows said they'd seen the fishing boat tie up again.

"I didn't recognize the boat. It isn't here regularly. And I didn't have any reason to take the auto number. Maybe I'd know it again. Maybe I wouldn't."

4 DIE In Ship Fire AT SEA

NEAR PANIC ON ITALIAN LINER

By the Associated Press

Palermo, Sicily, Oct. 19—The death of four persons in a fire aboard the luxurious motorship Vulcania was disclosed today when the vessel reached port, her third-class quarters charred by a menacing two-hour fire.

All of the victims were members of the crew.

An orchestra leader leaped overboard during the height of the blaze, which caused an SOS and sent 1100 anxious passengers to the decks. He was drowned.

The crew of the 23,970-ton liner put out the fire just as the first of a half dozen rescue craft, including a destroyer, two fireboats, a transatlantic liner and two packetboats, neared her side, approximately 45 miles off Naples.

Hundreds of passengers, many of them in their nightclothes, ran to the decks while the ship hove to and the crew brought her fire-fighting apparatus into play.

There was little panic, however, even in the third-class quarters, and the general conduct of the passengers was described by the ship's officers as "excellent."

The Vulcania carries several prominent Americans, among them Colonel and Mrs. Jerome Pillon of the United States Army and Mrs. Randolf Harrison of Lynchburg, Va., mother of the third secretary of the American embassy here.

Dark Horse Wins Race, Then Quits

What with the election just around the corner and everything, it was no shock—albeit somewhat of a surprise—when Patrolman William C. Peterson found a dark horse at Harrison avenue and Dudley street today.

Telling his cruiser-car mate, Patrolman Joseph W. McDonald, to halt their machine, Peterson leaped out and approached the horse to demand his name or some good reason why he was standing in the middle of the street without any wagon.

The horse was very coy, however. As Patrolman Peterson walked toward him, the animal walked away. The patrolman broke into a trot. So did the horse. The patrolman put on speed. The horse galloped.

The chase weaved merrily down Winslow street, into Zeigler. Puffing slightly, Patrolman Peterson stopped. So did the dark horse.

It had become quite a neighborhood affair by this time, the patrolman having his backers in the race, the horse his. But one unidentified citizen, with no sense of horseplay, appeared with a rope.

The horse must have seen the reinforcements, because he trotted away immediately. Patrolman Peterson trotted after him. It might have gone on indefinitely, but didn't, because after another two blocks or so the dark horse gave up.

It turned out that the animal belonged to Harold Davidson of Harrison avenue and had wandered out of a stable in the rear of 33 Hunnewan street.

Manila, P. I., Oct. 20 (Tuesday) (INS)—They can't stop us now!

After five agonizing days of waiting, Leo Kieran, my rival globe-girdler, and I are finally going to take off across the Pacific in the China Clipper.

As this is written, in the shivering small houurs of the morning, our sketchy luggage is all packed and we're ready to go down to Manila harbor, where the giant clipper plane is waiting.

I'll be the first woman ever to fly all the way across the Pacific!

I intended to get some sleep last night, but didn't—our party was entertained at dinner by the Manila newspaper publishers, and a little after midnight we were called away to make ready for the flight.

Bette Davis Loses Contract Fight

London, Oct. 19 (INS)—Maybe Fs tough on Bette Davis to be a "quiz" on her attorney puts it, to a contract at $3000 a week, but the contract Justice Branson ruled today, is binding and Bette has to stick to it.

The justice accordingly granted Warner Brothers an injunction, forbidding the fiery actress from working for any other company.

The injunction is "for the rest of the contract period or for three years, whichever is the shorter period."

Bette therefore will have to eschew the bigger salary with which it was alleged by an attorney who called her "a rather naughty young lady who wants more money," a British company enticed her from Hollywood to Elstree.

She was said to have been offered $50,000 to appear in one picture here, but her counsel said she sought to break the Warners contract because she had been "required to dine with politicians."

The judge, however, granted Miss Davis a routine stay of execution for two weeks pending notice of a possible appeal.

Delivering his judgment, Justice Branson said Bette broke the Warners' contract "for no discoverable reason except she wanted more money."

Publisher Griffin May Attach Liners In War-Debt Suit

Planning to attach the S.S. Queen Mary, Rex and Normandie through a Federal court taxpayers' action, William Griffin, publisher of the New York Sunday Enquirer, was here today determined to "do something about European nations shirking their war debts."

Griffin returned from Europe last week, where he conferred, without success, with Mussolini, Winston Churchill and President Le-Brun of France. In each case he was told that there was "nothing doing" on paying war debts, Griffin said.

The publisher, who will address an Irish-American Society at the Copley Plaza tonight, said lawyers in New York have completed a study of his plan to make himself a creditor of ocean liners.

He claims the American money loaned for war purposes was used to build all three ships. Taxpayers, he said, were the ultimate source of the money. Therefore every taxpayer" has a right to attach the ships.

AMOS PINCHOT SAYS ROOSEVELT, STALIN ARE ALIKE

CITES H. G. WELLS' BOOK, SEES LANDON AS ONLY HOPE

Roosevelt in this campaign as I did in 1932.

I would like to make my reasons for not doing so as clear as I can. So I am writing you this open letter, which I fear may prove unwelcome, partly on account of its length, and partly because of its contents, which include, I admit, a rather frank criticism of President Roosevelt.

Is He Socialist?

For the length of the letter, I hasten to apologize in advance. For I am aware that you are a very busy man. For its contents, on the other hand —and especially for the questions it raises about Mr. Roosevelt—I feel no apology is required. In fact, with the election less than a month away, they are questions of such a serious nature as to warrant more definite answers than have yet been made by any member of the Democratic administration.

The truth is that Mr. Roosevelt has followed a course which has made many sincere, liberal-minded people, who voted for him in 1932, believe that a radical change has taken place in his thinking. Today they sense in the President a growing distrust of American ways of life. More than that, they are beginning to suspect that he would not be sorry to see this country turn toward an economic and political order of a very different kind. In a word, they are asking, in all honesty, whether at heart Mr. Roosevelt is a liberal or a Socialist.

The administration takes the position that any question as to the change in Mr. Roosevelt's attitude has no place whatever in the campaign. Mr. Roosevelt himself takes this position. In language showing an unusual degree of irritation, he says that the question is irrelevant. He insists it has been dragged in by cunning, malicious people, in order to divert attention from more important issues.

With Mr. Roosevelt's position I find it hard to agree, in view of the fact that we have reason to believe that the Democratic platform will have as little effect on Mr. Roosevelt's actions in the future as it has had in the past. I think the change in his attitude, in his philosophy, political and economic, since 1932, is perhaps the most important single issue in this campaign.

This being the case, what do we know about the President's philosophy? It seems to me we have considerable evidence, not only of the direction of his thinking, but, what is far more important, of his probable course if re-elected.

Wells' Visit

In the spring of 1934, Mr. H. G. Wells, perhaps the foremost historian in the world, and one of England's eminent Socialists, came to the United States with a special purpose.

This purpose was to compare the New Deal under Mr. Roosevelt with the Russian regime under Mr. Stalin, and to find out, at first-hand, to what extent the President was moving in the direction of world Socialism.

Later in the same year, he went to Russia to confer with Stalin. The results of his observations he published in the final chapter of his autobiography, entitled "The Idea of a Planned World."

Mr. Wells explains the purpose of his two long journeys as follows:

"I took it into my head to see and compare President Franklin Roosevelt and Mr. Stalin. I wanted to form an opinion of just how much these two brains were working in the direction of the socialist world state that I believe to be the only hopeful destiny for mankind."

Wells spent a good part of four days at the White House talking with the President. He informed himself as fully as possible upon the New Deal. He discussed it with many of the President's close advisors in New York as well as Washington, including General Johnson, administrator of the NRA; Mr. A. A. Berle, and Professors Tugwell and Frankfurter. After which he returned to England, flew to Moscow with his son in July, and visited Mr. Stalin in the Kremlin. Then he went home and wrote his book.

'A Revolutionist'

Like everyone else, Wells was delighted with Mr. Roosevelt. He found in him not only a man of rare charm but "an astute politician and a subtle manager of masses and men." He found him to be "bold and unlimited in his objectives." He found him to be profoundly revolutionary.

"Does he realize," he wrote, "that he is a revolution?"

He found that he and the President were in substantial agreement on the subject of the coming order of world Socialism. More than that, he found him an effective exponent of the new order.

"I do not say," wrote Wells, "that the President has these revolutionary ideas in so elaborated and comprehensive a form as they have come to me; I do not think he has. I do not think he is consciously what I have called an open conspirator and it is quite clear his formulae are necessarily limited by the limitations of the popular understanding with which he has to come to terms. But these ideas are sitting all around him now, (1934) and unless I misjudge him, they will presently possess him altogether. Events are reinforcing them and carrying him on to action."

"He is being the most effective transmitting instrument possible for the coming of the new world order. He is eminently 'reasonable' and fundamentally implacable . . . He is continuously revolutionary in the new way without ever provoking a stark revolutionary crisis."

It was after four long sessions with the President in the White House that Wells came to the opinion that Roosevelt and Stalin had so much in common that it would be advisable for them to work together for the Socialist world state.

Spurned by Stalin

"I wanted," writes Wells, "to meet the ruling brain of the Kremlin while my Washington impressions were still fresh, because I thought that the two of them between them indicated the human future as no other two men could do."

With Joseph Stalin, however, Wells met unforeseen difficulties. He discovered that, in contrast to Mr. Roosevelt, the man in the Kremlin was obstinate, self-sufficient, and suspicious. Wells argued with Stalin at length, enlarging upon the necessity of co-operating with the President.

But Stalin would not accept Wells' estimate of the American "movement of Socialization." He refused to recognize the New Deal as a "genuine proletarian revolution." Though he admitted that it "might be the thin end of a widening wedge," he feared that capitalism was hiding around the corner waiting to spoil back. The true faith, said Stalin, was in Russia and Russia alone. Stalin, says Wells, sucked thoughtfully at his pipe, and insisted that America must have her October revolution and follow her Russian leaders.

Wells discussed other matters with Stalin. Then he returned to his original theme — co-operation between Moscow and Washington.

"I wound up according to my original intention, by insisting upon the outstanding positions of himself and Roosevelt and their ability to talk to the world in unison."

This conversation, it must be remembered, took place in 1934. It was long prior to the time when Stalin, reversing his judgment and shifting to the policy urged by Wells, threw the support of his American followers behind the President.

Wells was greatly disappointed by Stalin's narrowness, by his resistance to the "real creative forces coming in from the West."

Yet Wells did not revise his conclusion that, though what he calls "the constructive effort in Washington and Moscow" differ in method, their purpose is identical.

"The end sought, a progressively more organized big-scale community, is precisely the same."

Today, defenders of the New Deal loudly assert that the Socialists are supporting the Democratic ticket, not because they like President Roosevelt, but because they are opposed to Governor Landon. But on this score we must remember that it was in July, 1934, that H. G. Wells, one of the leading Socialists of the world, sat in Moscow and told Mr. Stalin that he and the President ought to preach Socialism "in unison." That was a year and eleven months before Governor Landon's nomination.

Now, Harold, if you say to me that Mr. Wells' opinion about the Democratic administration's drift to Socialism is, after all, but the opinion of one man, and that it would be unfair to accept his opinion without further evidence, I will agree with you thoroughly.

Cites Wallace

I think, however, there is plenty of corroboration, not only in the record of the New Deal, but in the opinions of the President's closest advisors.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace says in his recent book, "Whose Constitution," that the only way national unity can be obtained in this country is "by building up the co-operative commonwealth."

What is the co-operative commonwealth? It is a Socialist society from which competition, the profit motive, and private property have been removed, and production is for use and not for sordid gain. Well, they have precisely that in Russia. And it costs seven dollars to make a second-rate suit of underclothes.

Professor Tugwell, who has been in Russia and is enthused by what is happening there, says, as do all Socialists, that competition " is not the life of trade but the death of trade." That is in his 1935 book defending the New Deal. He says monopoly should be legalized. He wants the anti-trust laws removed, on the ground that they are against the "co-operative instinct of man." He ridicules the English economist, Sir Josiah Stamp, for holding that a belief, on the part of business men, that profits can be made tends to expand production and increase employment.

In his "The Industrial Discipline," Professor Tugwell recommends removing "the last vestige of competition" from our economic life. Is it remarkable that American business men, most of whom believe in the value of competition, are unwilling to support an administration and a President whose course has been guided by such opinion?

Mr. Stuart Chase, economic expert of the New Deal, whose book on waste is said to be one of the three always to be found on the table by the President's bed, states that the federal government must control new investment and regulate the increase in American manufacturing plants "year by year in a dynamic upward spiral."

A co-operative commonwealth—production for use only — a society devoid of competition—monopoly legalized—the anti-trust laws shelved—industry carried on without hope of profit—new investment, the volume of production, and prices controlled by Washington bureaucrats.

Call this what you please. Call it the New Deal, call it managed economy. But to me it is nothing more or less than the good old-fashioned standard-bred Marxian doctrine, which my Socialist friends have been dishing up for the last twenty years.

However, in the business of putting in practice their managed economy, the New Dealers have, I think, not been as faithful as in formulating it. For they have handed the public service, that must administer managed economy, to the tender hands of the postmaster general. They have done this with full knowledge that Mr. Farley would render it inefficient by loading it with political heelers and forging it into a low-grade electioneering machine. It was Mr. H. G. Wells, by the way, who, in 1934, warned the New Dealers that their managed economy would go on the rocks unless they provided for it a public-spirited, competent, and courageous public service.

We have stood a good deal of slackness and corruption from hard-boiled, hack politicians. We do not expect them to function on a high level, but when we find our devoted band of New Deal reformers, who are professionally on the side of virtue, outdoing Tammany itself, it is a discouraging symptom. It is like finding the angels in Paradise moulting or being sick with the pip.

Turn to Socialism

As you know, Harold, I have not been exactly a conservative. I have been rather liberal. I have spent years campaigning for public ownership of natural monopolies, of transportation and utilities. I have stood for the proposition that the resources, which furnish industry with energy and the principal raw materials, should belong to the government, and be leased to private users. I have worked for civil liberties and the rights of labor.

I opposed our entry into the World War at a time when it was not particularly comfortable to do so. Some of my best friends are Socialists. I supported Morris Hillquit for mayor on the war issue, and presided at his Madison Square Garden meeting.

But I have never been able to swallow Socialism. For I believe that all industry, with certain definite exceptions, should be owned and operated privately, competitively, and for profit. This, it seems to me, is the way to get large production, full employment, good wages, and low cost of living. I have opposed Socialism for the simple reason that I think it would cause stagnation, unemployment and a low standard of living.

Also, I believe that if Mr. Roosevelt is returned to power, his own philosophy and that of his advisors will drive him forward with his plan for a managed and highly disciplined America. And when this plan fails, as I think it is bound to, he will be forced, in order to delay its total collapse, to go in for more and more management, more and more discipline, and increasingly rigorous Socialist forms of control.

We have had the New Deal with us for almost four years. We still have eleven millions unemployed, twenty millions on relief. America, with all its great home markets, its wealth and natural advantages, has, with the exception of the gold bloc countries, lagged behind the world in the march of recovery. This, I believe, is because President Roosevelt has, with the best intentions in the world, but unwisely and consistently discouraged production, both on the farm and in the factory. Although production is the one major force that can bring back recovery, employment and good times.

I say to you in all earnestness that if America still has over half the unemployment that is reported in the world; if the earned income of our farms is three to four billions short; if farmers can carry on only by virtue of benefits, taken in the form of taxes from consumers who include the farmers themselves, it is mainly because the President, on bad advice, has played cat and mouse with business for three years. Until the courts checked him, he sat resolutely on production's head.

As you and I know, the revival we are having is not due to the government. It is due to obsolescence. It is due to the fact that years of stagnation have created an enormous need for goods and services. And this need is at last taking effect, notwithstanding the administration.

So far as I can gather, the reasoning of the New Dealers has been something as follows:

"We have had a series of depressions, the last of which is the worst of all. We don't know what to do about it, but we've got to do something. So let's scrap the present system, get rid of the whole shebang —and start fresh on a different line."

This, I may say, has been precisely the reasoning and the program of every Socialist I know.

In a word, our New Dealers have not recognized the fact that the 1929 crash was primarily due, not to our system itself, but to definite correctible evils which we allowed to grow up in it, and especially to the insane but preventable expansion of credit which caused the great boom and its collapse.

Votes for Landon

As I see it, the trouble with the American liberals, who are now supporting the New Deal, is that they have not stuck to their guns. They have found the old fight against injustice, privilege, monopoly, too heavy going. They have passed up the big job that must sooner or later be done, if the country is to come into its heritage. They have turned to instrumentalities which they do not understand, but which they fondly hope will take them by a lucky short-cut to millenium.

I am inclined to believe that, when the history of this period is written, the New Deal, which is not new at all, will be set down, not merely as an economic and political failure, but as a betrayer of American progress.

Consequently, I am going to vote for Governor Landon. I will vote for him for the foregoing reasons, and also because I think he has qualities which the New Deal lacks. They are character and common sense. He is not as advanced in his views as I am. But he is liberal and open-minded, and, if elected, he will be one of the few Presidents who in my time has gone into the White House free and without commitments. I see more chance for progress in an administration headed by him than by Mr. Roosevelt.

Well, to put it mildly, it will be interesting to see how things come out. For more will be decided on November 3 than in any election since the Civil War. In the meantime, if you see any of my old liberal friends around the District of Columbia who want to know why I am not with them—as I was in 1912, 1916, 1920, 1928, and 1932—show them this letter. Give them my regards, and tell them that, though I cannot train with them now, I wish them the best of luck.

One thing more. And this seems to me important and relevant at this time. Will you ask the President what was said, in the now famous 1934 talks at the White House, that made Mr. Wells conclude, after his visits to Washington and Moscow, that Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Stalin are moving in the same direction?

Sincerely Yours,
AMOS PINCHOT.

N. H. Police Blamed in Boy Suicide

Investigation was under way in Keene, N. H., today to determine why Wallace Anderson, 15, runaway Athol schoolboy, who committed suicide as he was being brought to police headquarters, had not been searched when he was arrested.

At the same time police in Athol were preparing for a roundup of an alleged band of youthful criminals, whose existence was disclosed by Anderson's companion in four days of escapades through three New England states.

Young Anderson and Donald Murray, 14, a State ward, were picked up by Stoddard, N. H., and brought to Keene police headquarters in a taxicab.

As the machine drew up in front of the station, young Anderson suddenly pulled a .32 calibre revolver from his pocket and shot himself in the head. He was pronounced dead at Elliott Community Hospital.

His companion told Keene police a strange story of how Anderson wished to make a holdup man of him.

He detailed their activities of the past three days which included a series of petty thefts and breaks into houses and garages.

Athol police were notified, and Captain Earle Grimes was sent to Keene to bring the boy back.

California Fires Quenched by Rain

San Francisco, Oct. 19 (AP)—Flame baited California's 1,000,000 forest fires today and threatened damage to a $1,000,000 lettuce crop.

Scattered fires throughout the state, which claimed three lives last Friday, were quenched or checked when rain, snow and cooler weather came to the aid of 1000 fire fighters.

Addis Ababa, Oct. 19 (AP)—Italy today completed a "mass reprisal" against Ethiopian irregulars who last July ambushed and killed 13 Fascist aviators in western Wallaga Province.

A MESSAGE OF IMPORTANCE to every man and woman who smokes

If you experience irritation of the nose and throat due to smoking, here are some vital facts you should know:—

A group of doctors made tests to learn for themselves whether the differences in cigarette manufacture have any relation to irritation of the nose and throat. . . . They made these tests with Philip Morris Cigarettes and cigarettes made by the ordinary method of manufacture.

Their tests proved conclusively that on changing to Philip Morris, irritation of the nose and throat cleared completely or definitely improved in every single case.*

Experience the joy that comes of smoking a cigarette that achieves its mildness without sacrificing the satisfying aroma of robust, full-flavored tobaccos.

√Philip Morris & Company do not claim that Philip Morris Cigarettes cure irritation. For they do say that an ingredient—a source of irritation in other cigarettes—is not used in the manufacture of Philip Morris.

KILLER SHOOTS 2 G-MEN, FLEES IN THEIR FAST CAR

BEER DRINKER SLAIN TRYING TO ESCAPE

Up the driveway and through the thick bare limbs of the trees we could see the great circle of light at the front door of the roadhouse. It was as brilliant there as at midday.

The men began to take their positions on either side and at the front of the house.

Dogs Raise Alarm

But our plan to surround he place quietly before our presence might be suspected was instantly frustrated; dogs on the grounds, sensing the presence of intruders, set up a loud and insistent barking. Those faithful sentinels cost the government the victory at Little Bohemia.

Immediately, five men appeared at the front of the house. Three of them hurriedly entered a coupe which was parked there; the other two ran back into the house. There appeared to be a great deal of commotion inside.

We were cloaked in darkness, the sound of our movements was lost in the noise of the wind whistling through the trees; it had seemed easy to surround the place and make a surprise attack, yet the alarm spread so efficiently by the barking dogs destroyed all hope of doing so now.

Immediately every man was instructed to abandon all caution and to proceed to his post as swiftly as possible.

The men in the car who had rushed out of the house were informed in the loudest voices we could command that we were federal officers. They had started the motor of the car and attempted to run through us.

We commanded them to halt and when they failed to do so, fired on the car. One of them in the automobile jumped out and ran into the woods; another of the trio tumbled out of the car wounded; and the other slumped over in the car.

A special agent crawled up to the car, while he was being covered by other special agents with machine-guns. He determined that the man in the car had been killed instantly. The man slumped on the running board had been wounded four times.

He stood up, and when we saw that he could walk we called out to him to come toward us, but he staggered back into the house.

3 Non-Members

We later discovered that these three men were not members of the Dillinger gang. They had come that night to the Little Bohemia Tavern to drink beer.

The man who was killed was Eugene Boiseneau, thirty-five years old, who worked in a nearby government camp; the wounded man was John Morris, fifty-nine years old, a cook at the camp.

John Hoffman, who had escaped serious injury and had disappeared into the woods, was an oil station attendant at Mercer, Wisconsin, a nearby town. He was the owner of the car.

In the meantime, the men going to the right of the house were delayed in reaching their posts by two barbed-wire fences which they had to scramble through.

The men who were to cover the left of the house ran into a drainage ditch in their hurry and because they were unable to see in the darkness.

Those of us who were covering the front part had proceeded to a point at the edge of the clearing just outside the area of light emanating from the front of the house.

Gunfire had begun from the upper stories on the left side of the lodge. For a moment I did not notice the flash of fire from another sector. Then a bullet hit the ground a yard from my right foot, and two other bullets struck trees behind me.

I suddenly realized that I was being shot at, and I didn't like it. The shots were coming from the vicinity of a small cabin on the right side of the lodge.

I whirled about, my machine-gun loomed, I threw it on the ground and returned the fire with an automatic pistol at a short, slender figure which was firing toward the woods.

I was trading life with Baby-Face Nelson.

Nelson, quartered in the cabin, had, with astonishing folly, delayed his departure to swing his gun through a sweeping arc and into the roll-spitting darkness.

It was later verified that this was actually Nelson after we had traced the movements of the hoodlums who escaped from Little Bohemia.

For a time the noise was deafening. The men on the left side of the lodge, after their scramble out of the ditch, discovered that they were being fired upon from the upper windows, and they answered.

For what seemed an endless interval there was not even a small pocket of quiet. Then, abruptly, the fire from the roadhouse ceased.

The machine-gun and rifle-fire continued for what seemed an interminable length of time. It was in reality only a few minutes.

We did not know that at that moment the hoodlums were scrambling out a rear second-story window and moving toward the right side of the lodge through the brush at the lake-front to freedom.

Hoodlums Escape

We do not know how they escaped; most probably they had gone to the north by the edge of the lake and through the woods during the time when the men were becoming disentangled from the barbed-wire fences which they had run into in their hurried effort to get to their posts.

In the meantime, Special Agents Jay Newman and Carter Baum were sent to the nearest telephone, which was in a country store nearly owned by a man named Koerner, for the purpose of calling the other Special Agents who were proceeding to Little Bohemia by automobile, to let them know where we were.

We shouted at intervals commanding those who were in the house to come out. Finally, Mr. Wanatka, the proprietor of Little Bohemia, and two waiters came filing through the front door with their hands up.

They had sought refuge in the cellar during the main part of the fire. The proprietor was very excited and frightened; he said there were four men still in the house. Every man was visited at his post and given this information.

The ominous silence in the lodge lent color to the belief that the gangsters were awaiting our onslaught, and since we had the place covered we decided first to attend to the wounded men and then to throw our gas shells in the windows of the lodge.

An ambulance was called from the C. C. C. camp to take care of our casualties. Nothing but rank stupidity and suicidal intent would have projected any man into that arc of light at that time.

The proprietor of Little Bohemia had come out of the house without a coat, and in the bitter cold night air would soon be suffering from exposure. He asked if he might go to a nearby friend's house to obtain a coat. He was granted this permission. After a time he came back. He was out of breath from running.

"Someone is holding up your men at Mr. Koerner's house," he said.

Agent Killed

Two special agents were immediately dispatched to that point. Finally, they returned; I seemed to dread their report. They stated that Special Agent Carter Baum had been killed instantly, and that both Special Agent Jay Newman and Mr. Carl Christenson, a local deputy constable, who had joined them, had been severely wounded by one of the Dillinger gang.

These men were sent at once to Ironwood, Michigan, where the nearest hospital is located.

We learned that these three men, upon arriving at the house where they were to make the telephone call, had seen an automobile in which three people were seated.

One of the special agents asked Mr. Christenson whose car it was, and the latter replied that it was all right and that it belonged to Koerner. Baum, Newman, and Christenson stopped their car in front of the house.

As they neared the other car, a figure moved out from behind it; it was Baby-Face Nelson; in his hand was an automatic. He spoke fast.

"I know you have on bullet-proof vests so I will give it to you high and low."

Nelson Flees

He began firing as he spoke. Baum was killed almost instantly. Jay Newman made several grabs to get the automatic in Nelson's hands but failed to reach it. He received a wound in the head and fell.

Nelson leaped into the car in which the agents and Christenson had driven up, and drove away.

Newman regained consciousness sufficiently to see the car disappearing about a hundred yards away and he emptied his automatic at it, but the bullets had no effect. There was no one to give pursuit.

The car Nelson had taken was the one we had commandeered and the one which had been geared up to a speed of one hundred and three miles an hour.

Koerner told us that Nelson had appeared at his store brandishing a gun and demanding a car. He was just about to leave in a car belonging to a native when the special agents and the deputy constable drove up.

21 'MATTRESS VOTERS' RULED OFF BRIGHTON LISTS

Names of 21 persons were stricken from the voting lists of Ward 21 in Brighton today as "mattress" voters.

Republican state committee protests against seven others were withdrawn and two other complaints were tossed out as technical "mixups."

The expunging of the 21 names was ordered by Chairman Daniel H. Shaw of the Boston Election Commission after all of them appeared and failed to answer summonses.

Constables charged with the duty of serving the summonses reported they just couldn't find the persons living in the ward.

50,000 'ILLEGALS'

This concluded the first hearing on the protests of Republicans that there are probably 50,000 persons in the state illegally registered for the coming election.

Tomorrow morning another batch of 20 protests will be presented to the commission for Thursday. Some names and list of witnesses will be announced in the election commission office.

The hearing today was preceded by a heated argument between Chairman Shaw and Attorney Theodore P. Hollis and Robert G. Rabb, who represented the G. O. P. state committee.

Barring stenographers from taking notes on the controversy Shaw accused Hollis of giving out a statement to the press in which it was inferred that the names of those who failed to appear had been left off from the election commission office.

The trio argued back and forth for some time. Hollis accused Shaw of making remarks about "vested rights" and the argument climaxed by Shaw threatening to halt the hearing today.

IN FIERY CLASH

It all ended amicably, however according to the chairman. He announced as the conclusion of the hearing that the Republicans' attorneys had apologized for any differences that there was a "leak" in the commission office.

Sole witness before the commissioners today was Martin H. Beatty of Hooker street, Brighton, who had been living with his parents in Aberdeen streets for some time and he knew was listed from their house. His wife apparently also gave her name in listing at the time. That he was registered from both Wards 21 and 22.

He explained that he didn't know there was duplication and the matter was straightened out by cutting his name from the Ward 22 list.

It was shown that the name of James J. Kennedy of Pratt street, Allston, who died last June, was likewise left. But another commissioners produced a revising list in which it was noted that Kennedy was dead.

"If we had been allowed to get hold of the revised lists, this trouble might have been saved," Hollis remarked.

Martin made the charges in announcing the appointment of Grand Francis Cox, noted criminologist, to organize and head an organization of vigilantes to watch the polls on November 3.

Martin's statement said in part:

"We have had complaints that there are at least 5000 illegally registered voters in one Boston ward.

"We have had complaints that in Boston there is evidence to show votes are registered in three different places.

"We have had complaints that there are 800 mattress voters in one Boston hotel in the North End section.

"We have evidence that colored residents of Virginia are being imported to Philadelphia for voting purposes.

"We are told on good authority that in Pittsburgh a number of aliens who have obtained only their first papers have been informed that if they don't vote—in other words, break the law—they will never be granted naturalization.

"In all warning to our opponents, I want to say that we will have at least 100,000 loyal Americans who will be here after the election laws of this country are not thrown overboard, or circumvented.

"To that end, I have asked Charles Francis Coe, the noted criminologist, and the aforementioned Shaw threatening to halt the hearing today.

REBELS 19 MI. FROM MADRID

Madrid, Oct. 19 (UNS)—Hurled back to within 19 miles of the capital by a sudden Rebel offensive on the Toledo road, the Madrid government cut off from all rail access to the provinces today announced 10,000 reinforcements for a stand at Tembleque de la Calzada.

"These successive victories will lead us to Madrid within two weeks."

The relief of Oviedo by a Rebel column was also announced today and Insurgent triumphs on the Huesca front and at Bilbao were likewise claimed.

Fritz Kreisler Retains All His Skill

By RUTH MARSTERS

Fritz Kreisler made one of the first concert appearances of a widely booked tour of Ameries in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon before an audience which, though not of capacity size, was still indubitably large.

The program opened with Kreisler's new and much discussed revision of the Schumann Fantasy in C major, Op. 131. There followed Bach's Sonata No. 3 in G minor (for violin unaccompanied); "Konzertstuck," the First Movement of Paganini's second concerto in D major, newly revised by Kreisler; and lastly an arrangement of Kreisler's old theme by Rimsky-Korsakoff, "Fantasy on Russian Themes."

With a long and distinguished career behind him, it is still apparent that Kreisler does not intend to rest on his laurels.

In most hardly be pointed out, on the other hand, that no new quality could possibly have been added to that quite perfect art which has been Kreisler's. His personality in music is established beyond any expectation of change. It is one that has endeared him to the music world and will continue to do so.

It is merely repetitious to comment on his sincerity of approach, his fine-spun artistry, his musicianship innate in the inimitable manner of phrasing, the pure sense of style, the sweetness of tone.

But if there is nothing to be said about either Kreisler's transcriptions or musical performance that has not been said before, Kreisler himself always appears to speak with a new voice.

Everything he touches is re-created with a fresh sparkle in his hands.

Tomorrow evening in Symphony Hall Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first concert of the Monday evening series of six. The program will include Haydn's Symphony in B flat, No. 102; Debussy's "La Mer" (three orchestral sketches) and Sibelius' Fifth Symphony in E flat.

On Tuesday evening, Felix Fox, Boston pianist, will give a recital in Jordan Hall. A varied program includes three sonatas by Beethoven, the Bach Chorale, "Nun ge Ye Christians All," transcribed by I. Philipp, Schumann's Sonata in F sharp minor, a Brahms Intermezzo and Twelve Etudes, Op. 10 by Chopin.

At the third regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Liszt's "Faust" Symphony. The Harvard Glee Club will assist in the performance of the work. Robin Robison to be the tenor soloist. The program will open with Wagner's "A Faust Overture."

'Chopin' Cast Suggestions Sought

Los Angeles, Oct. 19—Come on, everyone, listen carefully. Frank Capra and Harry Cohn would like to have you help in casting "Chopin." It's the next Capra-Columbia production and is to be made on a large scale with all the beautiful Chopin music featured. Fredric March, Charles Boyer and Franchot Tone are all names that mean box office and actors the energetic Mr. Cohn is considering for the colorful role of the famous composer. Who would you suggest?

You know without my telling you that there isn't an actor or actress in town who wouldn't make a very effort to play in a Capra picture and there isn't a producer who wouldn't be willing to loan his stars to him. Important in the Chopin era was George Sand, and Capra has his eye on Rosalind Russell for that pleasant role. Then there are De Musset and Liszt, who were friends of Chopin and who naturally will be represented in the picture.

Reverberations of the sensational $5,000,000 suit filed by Paramount against Samuel Goldwyn over Gary Cooper's services, crop up again in the rumors that Para is "disciplining" Gary with second billing and a small role in "Souls at Sea." That other problem-child of the lot, Georgie Raft, who has just made up with the company after a tiff of his own, gets the star spot and by far the biggest and best role he has had in some time.

Far be it from us to take sides in a matter of this kind, but with Gary's present popularity it seems that it will be a little difficult to hide him in any picture.

Irene Dunne will return from New York shortly with an assortment of gowns that will dazzle the eyes of all who see her in "High, Wide and Handsome." Irene has such excellent taste in clothes and wears them so well that if she doesn't watch out she will soon be called Hollywood's best dressed woman.

* * *

To Sally Eilers will go the record for having made an English picture and returned to Hollywood in record time. Sally sailed for home on the Queen Mary October 28 which will bring her back to Hollywood exactly five weeks from the day she left home. Raoul Walsh tried to persuade her to remain and play the lead in his next picture but Sally declined saying there wasn't money enough in the world to make her forego eating Thanksgiving dinner with Harry Joe Brown and her baby.

Let's hope Tala Birell has better luck with her brand new Universal contract than she had with her old one of several years ago. There was a lot of excitement over Tala at first, and then she was allowed to sit around and do nothing until her contract expired. Now U's interest in her is flaming anew, for Tala will be starred in "Blonde Dynamite" with Caesar Romero already set for the "heavy" role and Walter Pidgeon scheduled to play the lead opposite the foreign blonde star.

A Line or Two: After all the excitement of looking at hundreds of youngsters, David Selznick is temporarily shelving "Huckleberry Finn" because he can't find just the right boy for the role. He'll try again as soon as he completes "A Star is Born." Another postponement because of actors-who-can't-be-found is Paramount's "Head Gents." With the leading man scarcely on us, they just haven't the heart to look for three of them!

Callahan Hunted In N. H. Holdup

Thomas F. Callahan, who escaped from East Cambridge jail Saturday, was sought today as one of three robbers who seized $10,200 from a Hayhurst Shoe Company payroll messenger at Rochester, N. H., last Friday.

A description of the escaped jailbird sheriff Saturday and, with a description of one of the robbers, given to police by Robson Wells, state detective.

Catherine A. MacKinnon, 26, of Dorchester, who was found in a Rochester hotel room in possession of the robbers, is being held in $10,000 bail, charged with aiding a fugitive. Miss MacKinnon was subjected to questioning at the county jail by Sergeant and Court Officer Thomas McGrath.

Kenny, Al Smith's Friend, Very Ill

Havana, Oct. 19 (UP)—William F. Kenny, prominent New York city financier and long a close personal friend of Al Smith, was confined to the Anglo-American Hospital here today.

Kenny was stricken off the steamship Havana upon its docking yesterday. He was accompanied by his wife.

Doctors said Kenny was suffering from diabetes.

PARIS RED RIOT INJURES 42

Paris, Oct. 19 (UP) — Political passions in France burst forth in renewed rioting on the Champs Elysees where 42 persons were injured in violent clashes between leftists and nationalists.

Rioting began when Communists and other radical extremists encircled the Arc De Triomphe in taxicabs shouting imprecations at a nationalist organization which was relighting the flame at the Unknown Soldier's Monument.

Young nationalists attacked the taxicabs dragging several reds out to the pavement and the fighting was under way.

Police and mobile guards, armed with rifles, waded in and quelled the disturbances after 25 Communists and 17 Nationalists suffered damaged heads, lacerated faces and other injuries.

None of the injured victims was taken to hospitals. The police, adopting new tactics, made no arrests but made note of the identities of the rioters.

When the fighting subsided the rival factions attempted to form demonstrations, but the gendarmes and mobile guards broke up the gatherings.

Where Boston Business Goes "Down" to Lunch

Boston after DARK

By GEORGE HOLLAND

TONIGHT'S OPPOSING PREMIERES of Leslie Howard in "Hamlet," and Gladys Cooper and Philip Merivale in "Call It a Day," are the first important conflicting first nights in several seasons . . . Colleen Moore's famous doll house will play a return engagement in Boston shortly . . . Harry Richman has written what amounts to a form letter to columns where his name appeared in connection with his daring flight . . . "The Fancy Kid," whose absence from the local scene was mentioned in this space, was killed two months ago in an automobile accident . . . The obituaries were colorless because the plunger's real name was known to few . . . Norma Shearer, in the depth of her grief over the loss of her husband, Irving Thalberg, ordered a cessation of the build-up which nominated her "First Lady of the Screen."

GEORGE HOLLAND

"Hamlet" Among the Merry, Merry:

Rehearsal congestion on Broadway being what it has been, Leslie Howard and his "Hamlet" company practiced at the Winter Garden. One of the "Ziegfeld Follies" girls bounded past the stage door.

"Quiet, dear," said Fannie Brice, who was reading her mail, "they're rehearsing 'Hamlet.'"

"Who's he?" asked the beauty.

"Bobby Clark's understudy," cracked Fannie.

Once Over Lightly:

Harvard graduates are faring better in the theater than the football team on the gridiron. Robert E. Sherwood, '07, has scored on Broadway with his third successive hit, "Tovarich" is the title. He is the third successful success of the season . . . "Three Delight" was Long Bob's last season's smash song. "The Petrified Forest" was the one he wrote before that . . . Anson Bond, Harvard '14, produced and directed "Red, White and Blue," the musical that "Red, White and Blue" at the Colonial, and the producer has arranged a ticket-brokers' "buy" which insures him a profit in New York . . . Lee Simonson, Harvard '08, designed the nine scenes of "Call It A Day" so cleverly that although each set gives an illusion of breadth and depth, two sets are always in place behind the one in view to the audience . . . The invisible ingenuity helps the play.

The most mannerly gang of college kids ever loose in droves was the student-body of West Point. Many of the night-club owners said they were sorry that high minimum charges caused numbers of the cadets to seek other places of entertainment Saturday night . . . The Waterfront Club, with no minimum or cover, attracted squads of the youngsters in brass-buttons. Its second-day of the new management, the Rowes Wharf night-club played to capacity . . . Hotels, night-clubs and membership clubs like the Rainbow and Theatrical were packed . . . Louise Allen, the Brighton red-head, who has played parts in late Arthur Hammerstein shows, is in "Cain and Mabel," the Marion Davies-Clark Gable picture due Friday at the Metropolitan . . . Claudette Colbert's next film-play will be Gilbert W. Gabriel's romantic drama-ca, "I, James Lewis." Gabriel is the dramatic critic of Universal Service . . .

October's Poem:

"Twas yesterday that I was a man
And I chortled in glee when he died,
And I hummed a bit of a ribald song
As I stood at his quivering side;
For he was the geezer who always railed
And over the 'phone would hiss—
With never a word as to whom he was:
"Who's this?"

MILES OVERHOLT

A Scotch Story and Some Chatter:

This particular Scot walked from Lake street to the Common with his mouth wide open. He heard there was a nip in the air . . . The new Hotel Essex Italian Room is to be opened early in November . . . Shepard Straube, a native of Malden, has written an interesting guide-book to the Broadway Theater, "So You Want to Go Into the Theater?" He produced "Precedent," "No More Frontier" and "A Thousand Summers," the last starring Jane Cowl . . . Alfred Lucarotti of Charlestown, who writes as "Howard Cross," has had his poem, "The Swiss at Sempach," accepted formally by His Excellency, Meyer, President of the Swiss Republic . . .

New shows open at three of the night-clubs tonight . . . The Cocoanut Grove will be featuring Wilfrid Bray, the deaf and dumb dancing team . . . The Mayfair presents Hawthorne and Whitney as featured dancers, and Jimmy McHale will bring his popular band back to the Brown Derby to support a revue called "Nights in Paris" . . . Billy Wallace has opened a tavern on the site of Jimmy Malone's diner on Old Colony road . . . The Associated Jewish Philanthropies will hold a party at the Mayfair, Sunday, November 8 . . .

Social Note:

They are having the same old trouble in cajoling the new guests at Charles Street jail to go under the showers. Not all of the new arrivals object, but so many do that "Kid" Goodman, the former first-rate lightweight, who is in charge of the washing formalities, finds his job rather exting . . . The hoseman's job is one of the most sought in the institution . . .

Boston Talent—Here and There:

Bernice Parks at Levaggi's played seven months at Leon and Eddie's after she had found it difficult to get a job in Boston. Johnny O'Connor, one of New York's foremost managers, took Bernice under his wing after he heard her sing a torch song. The audition was unusual. Miss Parks was sent to her present manager as a classic dancer. She was a premier ballerina in opera. O'Connor asked her to sing for him. Contracts were signed a week later. The girl sings Cuban rhumbas, Russian and Italian songs, and a lot of American "swing" . . .

CLARK GABLE MARION DAVIES

Marion Davies registers another sterling performance in her latest screen hit, "Cain and Mabel," which comes to the Metropolitan on Friday. Clark Gable has the leading role opposite Miss Davies and they have won the unanimous praise of the critics and movie fans. The above scene is from the film.

Hinda Stars Again at Howard

Hinda Wassau, the flashing-eyed Brazilian born beauty and her "Hinda Belles" open a week's engagement including a Friday night midnight performance at the Old Howard today.

In her company are Pinto and Della, Ada Lilyan, Estelle Gibson, Joe Young, Nazarre Hallo, Frank Master, Paul Leroy, Marion Mason, Harry Allen, Nada King, Doris Leith, the dancing Marchand trio and more than a score of dancing pretties.

Socialites Will Attend Y.W.C.A. Anniversary Functions

By BETTY ALDEN

NO MATTER HOW detrimental it may be to our ear drums and radio tubes, the present political campaign is a great help to the gasoline business . . .

This may sound like a very queer sidelight but the explanation is quite simple . . . A great many of our socially prominent citizens are registered voters in the country or seashore towns where they maintain summer homes, and this year they are staying away until after November 3, so they can be at the polls bright and early on election day . . .

MRS. THEODORE H. GALLAND

Some of the husbands must be at the office as usual, however, and the women folks have to attend their social functions, so the roadsters and town cars are put into almost constant service carrying passengers back and forth between summer home and town . . .

One of those who is coming into town for an important social occasion on October 27 will be Mrs. B. Devereux Barker who, with Mr. Barker, has postponed moving back to town from Driftin, at Marblehead Neck . . . She will be a guest of Mrs. George E. Warren at the dinner marking the 70th anniversary of the Boston Y. W. C. A.

. . . Also in Mrs. Warren's party will be Mr. and Mrs. Edward Jackson Holmes and Mrs. Joseph Sargent . . .

Mrs. George C. Caroline Grosvenor Makes Debut

MRS. JAMES PERRY THURBER of Milton was one of the pourers at the tea and reception for 600 which Mr. and Mrs. William Grosvenor of Newport gave Friday afternoon in honor of their debutante daughter, Caroline Grosvenor . . .

The debutante, who received with her mother, wore a slipper satin gown of pale chartreuse green with a corsage of creamy gardenias at the shoulder . . . Mrs. Grosvenor was gowned in silver blue lame with gardenias, and the house was decorated with dahlias and chrysanthemums . . .

Mr. and Mrs. George Peabody Gardner, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Richard Cary Curtis of Boston, uncles and aunts of the debutante, who are doing quite a bit of re-retaining for her in Boston this winter, were among the Bostonians at the tea, and the other pourers were Mrs. Gilbert Maurice Congdon of Providence, who is giving a dance for Miss Grosvenor in December; Mrs. Duncan Langdon, Mrs. Kenneth Shaw Safe, Mrs. G. Hall Smith, Mrs. Ashbel T. Wall, Jr., all of Providence; Mrs. Charles Lee Andrews and Mrs. William Drury of Newport . . .

The bride attended Packer College. Her brother-in-law is a graduate of Yale. Mr. Holbrook attended Phillips Andover Academy and Williams College.

Regis Alumnae to Hold Harvest Dance

By MARGUERITE DOWNEY

EMPIRE BALLROOM of the Hotel Vendome is going rural.

Its French color scheme of ivory and blue is being forgotten for the evening of October 30 when Regis alumnae is importing clusters of vari-colored leaves, orange pumpkins and corn stalks to decorate the hall for its harvest dance.

Don't think from the setting a barn dance is going to be held. No reels or square dances in the lives of these graduates . . . one of Boston's best bands has been booked to play the season's best swing tunes.

Mary Thomas of Watertown is in charge of the evening and Kay O'Grady is arranging the night's music. Assisting her are Catherine Nugent of Boston, Rita White of Cambridge and Mrs. Wallace Haley of Winthrop.

Corinne Tondarf of Dorchester is doing her bit by the party. She's chairman of the ticket committee. Her aides are Helen Cole of Belmont, Catherine Taylor of Watertown, Lillian Dowling of Milton, Alice LaBoustere of Weymouth, Leah Dalton of Braintree, Ruth O'Keefe of Peabody, Helen Cahill of Newton and Juliet Moran of Melrose.

Publicity chairman is Mary Daly of Dorchester. She is assisted by Margaret Donovan of Newton, Eleanor Flynn of Walpole, Helen McGillivary of Wellesley.

Another group actually working for the success of the evening are Mary McNamara, Mildred Sheehan of Dorchester, Mrs. Edward McGreenery of Newton, Ruth Burke of Dorchester, Mary Byrnes of Arlington, Claire Conley of Brighton and Alice McNamara of Newton.

Somerville Group To Conduct Dance

Of all novel bids of the season, the one to the Somerville Junior Hallowe'en frolic is "tops."

Vivid orange oats leering at you from a background of black cardboard and gaily-colored lettering announce the annual soiree at the Fox and Hounds, Friday evening.

The dances of the Somerville young folk are always such jolly affairs, the active committee will have to do some tall stepping to keep up with the goal which dance committees have set at other soirees.

Mary Diskin heads the committee and helping her gather names for the patroness list are Irene Durant, Claire Fleming, Isabel Mahoney, Elizabeth Lamborghini, Mary McSweeney, Helen Sullivan, Phyllis Brine, Eleanor Shanahan, Helen Kelley and Helen Sutherby.

In charge of the reservations for the frolic is Mary Mullin. Tables for the party have already been taken by the group of junior patronesses. Mary Chillmate, Gertrude McKenna, Mildred Wolfe, Ruth Sheehan, Alice Maroney, Margaret Falvey and Madlyn Meloy.

Mailing the invitations to the dance are Katherine Sullivan and a corps of workers, Mary Donovan, Rita Bannister, Mary Carroll, Margaret Kane, Rita McNamara, Mary Brennan, Betty Flynn and Barbara Niles.

Matrons at the dance will include Mrs. John J. O'Neill, Mrs. John Diskin, Mrs. William Nuhn, Mrs. Mae Keefe, Elizabeth Power and Mrs. John Maguire.

Moore-Donnelly Ceremony

Fashionable Bostonians crowded Sacred Heart Church in Newton Centre to watch Mary Donnelly, daughter of Mrs. William Henry Donnelly of Newton, exchange wedding vows with Gerald Moore of Brighton.

Rev. John Reynolds read the nuptial mass, which was followed by a breakfast and reception at the home of the bride's mother.

Mary was given in marriage by her brother, William Henry. She was a decidedly attractive bride in her classic gown of ivory white satin topped with a tulle veil which fell from a coronet cap of heirloom lace.

Annabel Farrell of West Newton was her roommate of honor attendant. Her gown of fuchsia velvet was trimmed with white ruching. A big Mary of Scotland hat of matching velvet and a bouquet of yellow roses completed her ensemble.

The quartet of bridesmaids, who wore similar gowns of American beauty velvet and carried clusters of talisman roses, included Margaret Donovan of Newton, Dorothy Mullin of Winchester, Betty Hennessey of Brookline and Mary Moore of Brighton, sister of the bridegroom.

Mrs. Donnelly chose a smarty-tailored suit of soft grey wool, edged with moleskin, for her daughter's reception. Mrs. Frederick Moore, the mother of the bridegroom, was gowned in sapphire velvet with matching hat and cape of gold carseul.

MRS. CHARLES G. DALTON, the former Anne Frances Cross, was one of the season's prettiest brides. Mrs. Dalton attended Trinity and Emmanuel and is well-known in Boston's young set. Her wedding took place a week ago Saturday at Our Lady of the Assumption Church in Osterville.

Senator Austin Finds:

Arab Sheds Light In Palestine Crisis

This is the seventh of a series of articles by Senator Warren R. Austin of Vermont, a member of the Hearst Senatorial Unofficial Commission to Palestine, giving his report on the crisis in the Holy Land.

Senator Austin is a member of the Senate judiciary committee and is a constitutional lawyer of distinction. While in Palestine he made a special study of the mandate and the obligations of the United States in connection with the administration.

By WARREN R. AUSTIN
U. S. Senator from Vermont

Copyright, 1936, American Newspapers, Inc.

"The Arabs in Palestine cannot get along with the Jews. The Jews in Palestine cannot get along without the Arabs."

This striking statement was made to me by an educated Arab of distinguished family whose identity must be withheld.

His point of view was at variance with the official Arab attitude, and his approach to the Jewish question as constructive, that it shed a new light on the crisis in Palestine.

"So long as we live in the same country as cousins, we might as cooperate," he commented upon the relations between the Jews and the Arabs. "The Jews make the mistake of not employing more Arabs in industry. It would build up means of regulation and maintaining peace.

"I am an Arab, and if I want to put up a building, I engage some Jews for the job. But if a Jew wants to build, he does not engage Arabs. The Rutenberg Electrical Works has some 300 employes, but there are only five Arabs among them.

Arabic Teaching

"The Jews should include the teaching of Arabic in their schools, just as we have introduced the study of Hebrew in our schools. Twenty per cent of the Arabs know Hebrew perfectly, while 50 per cent of the Jews do not speak Hebrew themselves.

"The Arabs, on the other hand do not cooperate with each other. The Arab who has a government position is always exposed to attempts of other Arabs to put him out and get his place.

"If Palestine were given over completely to the Jews, they could not survive here, because they would be subject to constant attacks by Arabs from Syria or Iraq or Egypt. As a small state, they would be surrounded by enemies. A Jewish kingdom could never survive.

"The Arabs could not live alone in Palestine and make progress, because they have not enough capital to run the show. Where there is mixed Jewish and Arab capital, as in certain banks, cement works, potash plant, it works all right. The Jews should not boycott the Jewish interests, and the Arabs cannot boycott the Arab interests."

When asked for the cause of the present conflict in Palestine, the Arab spokesman had it in the desire of the Mufti to take sole control of the budget of the Moslem community which furnishes a revenue of about $600,000 annually.

"The proposed legislative council was the cause of the strike," he declared. "The Mufti wanted to keep his power. If we had a legislative council, it would have the power to check the books of the Supreme Moslem Council. Now the Mufti controls all the moneys himself.

"It was planned to have proportionate representation in the legislative council of all the Arab parties. The Mufti would have one representative, but seven others would represent the other parties. These seven would insist on auditing the books of the Mufti.

"It was for the same reason that the proposal for a legislative council made to the Arabs by Sir Herbert Samuel in 1922 fell through. Then the Jews would have had but one representative and the Arabs eleven. The Mufti wanted to keep his hands on the treasury of the Supreme Moslem Council.

"The Mufti stays in power with the help of the British government. This government wants to have two Arab parties, so as to let them fight each other."

Land Question

On the sore point of the land question in Palestine, my Arab informant differed sharply from the Arab leaders of the strike. He said to me:

"If Arabs in the agricultural districts have been dispossessed, it is the fault of the Arab owners. Take the case of an Arab woman proprietor of several small villages. If she sells a village to Jewish people, the Arab occupants have to move out.

"A law enacted about a year ago requires that the dispossessed be provided with other lands or funds for the purchase of parcels elsewhere.

"Most of the Arabs who have sold agricultural tracts for Jewish colonization are not Palestinians, but Syrians."

The main theme of this Arab spokesman's statement was the view that it was mutually advantageous for the Jews and the Arabs to cooperate.

Because of the prevailing terror, it was not a popular stand for an Arab to take. Many of his compatriots had suffered dire consequences for preaching a Jewish-Arab understanding.

WOMEN IN LOVE

By Mae Christie

CHAPTER 5

Much as she would have loved a second chat with the handsome merchandise-manager, wouldn't it be better policy to play up to the buyer of the Gift Shop?

But Brenda Selz had gone to lunch, she was informed.

It was then that Ann realized that she herself was healthily hungry. On being told there was a restaurant at the top of the building, she went up in the elevator.

And the very first person she encountered was none other than Gordon Davis, a Society boy from her own milieu who had had to leave Harvard two terms before his graduation due to his father, a Wall Street financier, leaping as had many others, from his high office window.

From the time they had attended the Junior holiday dances, Ann then being in her early teens, Gordon had admired the young, perpetual Debarked daughter. There was a strength in her he lacked. He was mad about Ann, but since his family fortune crashed with Wall Street, he had completely removed himself from the set around.

He had to.

A proud and manly youth, whose demeanor was unconsciously out on a new world he detested.

From a gilded only son at Harvard, living in his own suite of rooms at Clavering Hall, complete with valet, to advertising copywriter in the department store of Bernice & Weiss, and at nights returning to his single room in a drag rooming-house was he considered something of an anticlimax!

"Gordon! How perfectly marvelous to run into you here!"

Dropping her parcels on the first table handy, Ann held out her two hands to the good-looking youth.

"Why, Ann!" he stammered, flushing. "How—you're shopping here?"

"Yes. No. I mean, I've got a job. I'm working. I'm thrilled about it, Gordon. Let's eat together, shall we?"

"I'd love to. I say, I can't believe you're real. Can you imagine, I haven't seen you since the last Junior dance—remember last February, wasn't it?"

He sat at the little table where young pigeons nestled, seeing access it towards her with his whole soul to his eyes. He was thinking, and she was thinking, too, how lovely she was.

"Forget the ugly old months-bills and the old days—and let me chaperon them! The weirdest world is begin more amusing," Ann told him.

He didn't find it so. He was a moody boy, was Gordon Gavin. A square peg in a round hole.

"You mean you're doing Settlement Work with the Junior League?"

"Junior League nuts! Little Ann's out for cash and deep—hard cash—she needs it!" said little Ann gaily.

"And what brings you here?"

Her Job!

"My job. My divine new job at comparison-shopper! Ann, I'm not snooping on a secret getaway, are you? Mata Hari darling!"

His retort was by no fact that no father to no—a graduate and form-trained girl pausing the table. She had a ripe red mouth whose underlip was a generous one, with her strong white teeth as her slanting eyes swiftly took in the young couple.

But Ann, who was intuitive, glanced up and caught the look. "Gordon, who's that?" she asked of him.

He shrugged. Nonchalantly. "That's Benita Parrish, friend of stock. Not a bad egg, in her way."

"You work here?"

"Certainly I do. I jingle!"

"You what?"

He grinned. "I jingle! Pardon of the house. His will shown to the opening tea in his" in terms of the thrilling mental machinery of one-piece communications." I grow lyrical on the low boundaries, my dear." And point-toed, he executed an on-little pink silk step-to-step.

She laughed. Ann's laugh was like a fountain of delight. He glowered at her.

"You think it's so funny for me to be a fountain of delight. But he's an—to write the great American novel?"

"Glorious training, old boy, since the American novels fairly sizzling with (shall I say?) dramatic facts!"

"Pink pajammer stuff? I live it and eat it at sleep—I live it and eat it at sleep—I live it and eat it at sleep—

THE ALL-STAR CAST of Puck—The Comic Weekly, distributed through the great Hearst Sunday newspapers, begins its first performance even before Johnnie gets dressed on Sunday morning.

The second performance comes after Mary's none-too-patient wait for Johnnie to finish. Little Sally, unable to read, gets her turn when Mother finds time to read to her.

Then there's Dad, and possibly Grandpa and Grandma, more patient but none the less determined to keep up with Jiggs & Maggie, Tillie, Popeye, Skippy, Barney Google, Flash Gordon, The Katzenjammer Kids, Toots & Casper, the Little King and Company, before Puck—The Comic Weekly moves on to the kitchen and garage for the edification of Bridget and Perkins.

Altogether, the All-Star Cast has a busy day, but fortunately the day is long and the hours many so that all in the household may be regaled by the laughs and loves, thrills and tears which make Puck—The Comic Weekly, so appealing to everybody.

Nowhere in the "comic" field is there another All-Star Cast—a cast which is identical on Main Street and on Broadway. Nowhere but in Puck—The Comic Weekly, is there such a leisurely and brilliant presentation of the drama of human life as it is lived in American homes.

Successful advertisers are capturing with their colorful pages in Puck—The Comic Weekly, the same lively interest which the All-Star Cast has aroused amongst its readers for two generations. From this springs a buying influence that determines what dealers stock and sell in the 995 cities and towns of 10,000 population and over, where 73% of Puck—The Comic Weekly's U. S. circulation concentrates.

Remember, it's the cast that makes the comics. The one and only All-Star Cast is in Puck—The Comic Weekly. It's your surest guarantee of star pulling power.

Military Martyrdom, Cadets Give All For Army Alma Mater

THE REAL HEROES OF SATURDAY'S soupbowl game were not Harvard or Army's 57 mud-mottled athletes who risked their collarbones and bones on the greasy going at Soldier's Field. Hardiest heroes were the 1800 tortured troopers who sat, sans slickers, flasks or gumshoes on the rain swept heights while their cardboard freshness melted and their mouse-gray masses turned by gradual stages from soggy lavender to soaked purple.

Though, officially, they were "on leave" from the opening kickoff till midnight and might permissably have climbed down the slopes and found shelter underneath the stands, they scorned the sissy implication and remained yelling their Mother Goose cheers till the last white line was erased. Raindrops, like as aspirin pills, pelted on their platter hats, guttered down their neckbands and overflowed the lapels. The folds of their capes made spillways and there were paddles where they sat.

MONKEY STEALS THE SHOW

MONK MEYER, THE ANEMIC-LOOKING cadet [illegible], appeared more like a gentleman jockey in the East's most publicized ground gainer in this year's [illegible] of all collegiate sports, lived up to the [illegible] of his advance press notices, and [illegible] accident—though oddly his rubbery type seldom gets hurt—to gain of an All-America berth in the December summaries.

Monk's secret is simply super-coordination, and there is much about him that reminds one of Eddie Casey, Harvard's whispy halfback of 18 years ago. Both have that electrical instinct, the short, shuffling stride and the full book of open field tricks—the knack of extending a portion of the anatomy to a tackler and then yanking it away, the pinwheel whirl and buckjump that breaks a tackler's clutch, the knack of straight arming an opponent and riding out his rush with feet off the ground, the loafing approach and sudden burst of speed, the stop and start, and above all that uncanny equilibrium that makes people marvel that a man, hit so solidly and hugged so firmly, can somehow keep his feet and squirm loose.

EGAN ROOTS FOR NOVICE

READY FOR ARENA GONG AND QUEST FOR AMATEUR TITLE

New Faces Needed in Game

By DAVE EGAN

Riots will probably rise to new and untold-of heights tonight at the Arena, when the first elimination bouts in the Hearst All America amateur tourney are started.

These boys who will compete, some 200 of them from all parts of New England, are new and fresh faces, for the most part. They are not the professional amateurs who have been kicking around Boston rings for many years. They come from the outlands, where I come from.

I am hoping against hope that some outlander, possibly some raw-boned boy who has never before pulled on a glove or hitched up his fighting trunks, will come through in this tournament, and I have a strange feeling that a new boy is about to be unloosed on the wide-awake public.

There was a day and age when New England had fighters it could call its own—hard-fisted and hard-fighting young men like Jack Sharkey, before he became the landed squire; and Jim Maloney, before he became the sample of baloney; and Ad Wolgast, Sammy Fuller and Red Chapman.

Renard the Lion-Hearted, who became a court officer, without a lawsuit on his former head, was a top fighting in those days. He was under the name of Pete (Honey Boy) Finnegan, but he was always Renard the Lion-Hearted to me.

Popular

Finnegan lacked the physical equipment of a great fighter, but he was still one of the greatest I've ever looked on. He was a gangling boy with a wasplish waist, a physical freak who used to punish himself to make 126 pounds.

There was great shaking of heads, and knitting of eyebrows, for everybody in the town loved Jimmy Finnegan, and didn't want harm or hurt to come to him. It was said on all sides that he'd run himself into a sad state of tuberculosis, making that weight, and nothing to eat but Swedish baths and sweating off precious pounds of ripe young flesh.

Youth has a fruitiness which makes us oldsters sad. It bounces back from batteries, and so Dick Finnegan, the Honey Boy, kept DOMINIC SALVATI of East Boston, New England 118-pound champion, with his handler, Joe Santaprio, former heavyweight star and Fordham College football ace. Dominic will compete in the All-America tournament at the Arena tonight. More than 14,000 boxing fans are expected to jam the edifice where a new fistic sensation may be uncovered. At any rate, there will be many thrills.

Big Entry List Causes Start At 6:30 P. M.

By WALTER KILEY

Boxing, long dormant locally, comes stamping its way back into commanding prominence with a formidable array of bouts of thrill-laden possibilities, thanks to the great All-American tournament which breaks away at Boston Arena this evening.

Great Rush

There are still seats remaining but indications point to a gate of 14,000 spectators as the best from all over New England jam into each other's mitts and mats, fists flying, knockouts frequent, orthodox and unorthodox styles clashing, and intense, gripping action predominating throughout the long schedule.

Tickets are priced at 55 cents and $1.10, none higher.

These prices will also endure through the ground night's trials next Monday evening and the finals, which are to be held at the Arena on the night of November 9.

Big Chance

IF IT'S action you want, continuous excitement, with humor and pathos and remarkable talent all tossed into the one gripping arena, then you'll be found at Boston Arena very early this evening.

President Asks Ban on Drink

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 19 (UP) — Total abstinence at the Princeton-Navy football game here next Saturday has been asked of all ticket holders by President Harold W. Dodds.

In a notice sent to all persons who have made reservations for the game the president said:

"Intelligence in alcoholic excesses at football games has assumed proportions which seriously menace the future of the sport as an intercollegiate activity.

"On behalf of the friendly rivals of the day who strive to maintain high standards of sportsmanship on the field and in the interest of the vast majority of spectators to whom such drinking is an offense, Princeton university requests that all persons refrain from the use of alcoholic liquors while attending athletic contests under its auspices."

Duquesne bowled over Pittsburgh, and that, my friends, was an upset in every sense of the word. Duquesne is good this year, there is no doubt of that, but Jock Sutherland's Pitt Panthers looked like a Rose Bowl candidate. It just goes to show.

The third upset was the Cornell victory over Syracuse. Many believed that Cornell would win on the strength of the Baldwin-Wallace victory over Syracuse the week before.

football unit in the country. What price the finest coaching brains of the business against the hand-picked muscular horde?

KELLEY'S TOUCHDOWN KICK

THE FIRST CONTROVERSIAL HAPPENING of the season occurred in the Yale-Navy game, when Larry Kelley, Yale captain, kicked a fumbled ball toward Navy's goal and recovered it on the three yard line, thereby setting the stage for Yale's winning touchdown.

This furnishes one of those little bricks from which newspaper [illegible] are built, like the question of whether the [illegible] called by A. W. Palmer last year against Army in the Notre Dame game, was warranted by subsequent movie evidence.

The rule on a free ball being kicked by a player reads: (Rule 10, Section 1, Article 4) "A free ball may not be kicked or kicked at. Penalty—loss of ball to opponents." But there is also a supplemental note to this ruling: "A player, in endeavoring to recover a free ball (fumble) accidentally strikes it with his foot or leg. This is not to be considered as kicking at a free ball, the prohibition being against the positive act."

Thus it becomes a matter for eyesight judgment. And in the Navy-Yale game George "Bulger" Lowe, a competent, experienced official of long standing, was the umpire. He states that Kelley's kick was totally accidental, occurring in the general scramble for [illegible] QED

A WORD TO WILLIAM

THIS COLUMN LEARNS TO ITS CHAGRIN that it has tramped, inadvertently, on the tender corns of the Post's Will Cunningham. This pillar wrote recently that a newspaper conspiracy appeared to be brewing to paint the Yale football captain, Larry Kelley, over with counterfeit quaintness. From first hand observation, I wrote, that Larry did not say, on being introduced to Field Judge Dan Kelley just before the Cornell-Yale game, "I hope you are as good an official as I am a football player." Which, considering that it was untrue, seemed giving an innocent youngster a brash character.

My comment was based on several New York news exchanges, though subsequently I learned that Cunningham had also authored the yarn. If I had known it, naturally I would have avoided the matter as a simple courtesy due a contemporary. But, frankly I don't follow Cunningham's comment regularly, because I don't like left-handed golf, yeasty egotism, editorial caresses toward male butterflies, or predigested pap in the tone of a Supreme Court judgment.

I mention this shyly, because after all Bill's technique is his personal business. I wouldn't mention it now if Will, in his expansive way, had called me on the telephone and asked, "Where the heck do you get off . . . etc.?" Then I would have apologized and made suitable restitution in type. But I didn't think it genteel to say, in that roundabout way, that I am advertising the fact that I officiate at football games and remark that our sport writing brethren had to bail me, and other football officials, out of embarrassing jams.

I don't think, Will, that a pot like you should call a kettle like me black, considering that you sometimes use whole columns to exploit your radio spoutings and tell how you suffered intestinal tickles and maidenly twitters, which were like to shudder off your skin. Not much sport comment there but plenty of ballyhoo. But then that's your business, as I say. Since you brought the matter up, you are a pretty large topic for one sitting and I think this ought to be brought up in installments.

Lewis Haney on Stock Market

Wisdom Dictates

CAUTION IN BUYING

Many Highs Reached

By LEWIS HANEY
(Professor of Economics, New York University)

New York, Oct. 19—After dipping on Wednesday and Thursday of last week, the stock market came back on Friday and Saturday to close the five days' trading with a fractional gain.

Of course, this statement conceals the "averages." A considerable number of individual stocks gained four or five points during the week, and numerous new highs were touched.

Bonds averaged slightly higher again, for the fourth successive week.

There is a good deal of feeling in Wall Street that the rise is artificial and subject to severe reaction. This doubtless makes for caution, and for profit-taking on the bulges, which tends to keep the technical position in good shape.

Whatever may lie underneath, it must be admitted, however, that no definite and conclusive indications of any severe nearby reaction have yet appeared.

Let us, therefore, examine the bullish and the bearish arguments at the moment.

The bulls can say:

1—No liquidation pressure is apparent.

2—The volume of trading declined on the Wednesday sel-off and the increase on Thursday was negligible.

3—The stocks which lead in activity almost all move up, not down. Ten of the dozen most active during the week showed gains.

4—Numerous individual issues continue to make new highs—80 on Friday and 71 on Saturday.

5—No weak public following is yet in the market, and low brokers' loans show that selling to protect inadequate margins is not likely to be a factor.

6—In a good many cases, the floating supply must have been much reduced by investment buying, particularly as sponsors have shown willingness to take large blocks.

7—European buying keeps coming in, showing something resembling a flight of capital into our securities.

8—Business news is more than 50 per cent bullish, and several stimulants are immediately at hand, such as government doles to farmers, and the forced distributions of corporation income to stockholders.

* * *

The bears can say:

1—The averages have rounded off, and the move has lost momentum.

2—The volume of trading on Saturday was much out of proportion to the progress made in prices.

3—Selling comes on all bulges.

4—The rotation in leadership from group to group looks like strong-arm work. (The run-up in coppers reminds one that these issues often act that way in the late stages.)

5—The short interest seems to be reduced, and no stocks are at a premium in the stock loan market.

6—Many stocks are very high in price, if judged by earnings.

7—Artificially stimulated buying may lead to some relapse in business after the turn of the year, and reveal overproduction in some cases.

8—Uncertainty, due to the threat of radical collectivist policies if the New Deal party wins in November.

9—Threat of a European war.

The chief bullish forces, at the moment, seem to be: (1) European buying, and (2) the probable further expansion of business during the next two or three months.

The chief bearish forces seem to be: (1) The high price of the better securities, and (2) the serious political crisis in which the radical "New Deal" movement threatens American democracy and all individual business enterprise.

* * *

Thus I am frankly undecided and in doubt as to the nearby movement to be expected in the stock market. I would take profits on the more speculative and doubtful stocks I hold, particularly on any further rise in the market. I would be very cautious about buying anything at present.

I think that eventually we will have a good deal higher average price, and would hold selected positions backed by adequate earnings. I merely think that there is enough chance of a reaction to warrant waiting another week or two in order to be sure.

BOND, Stock Issues OFFERED

AGGREGATING $10,500,000

Two issues of bonds and preferred stock of Cumberland County Power and Light Company aggregating $10,500,000 will be offered today to provide funds for redeeming an issue of higher coupon bonds.

Simultaneously with a public offering of $9,500,000 first mortgage bonds, 3½ per cent series due 1966, at 103¼ and accrued interest, a pre-emptive offering of 10,000 shares of the company's preferred capital stock, 5½ per cent cumulative, is being made to preferred and common stockholders at $103 per share on the basis of one share for every 8.7194 shares held on October 17.

Any unsubscribed portion of the preferred stock will be offered to the public at the same price.

The bond issue is underwritten by a banking group headed by The First Boston Corporation and including A. C. Allyn and Company, Inc., Harris, Hall & Company (Incorporated), Halsey, Stuart & Co., Inc., Coffin & Burr, Inc., H. M. Payson & Co., Maine Securities Company and Charles H. Gilman & Co. The underwriting group for the preferred stock is headed by H. M. Payson & Co., and includes Charles H. Gilman & Co., Maine Securities Company, The First Boston Corporation and A. C. Allyn and Company, Inc.

Proceeds of both issues will be applied toward the redemption of $10,418,000 first mortgage 4½ per cent bonds which have been called for payment on December 1, or to pay temporary bank loans which may be made for that purpose.

* * *

Upon completion of the financing, the company's funded debt will be reduced by $918,000 and will consist of $1,553,000 first mortgage 4 per cent bonds in addition to the new issue of $9,500,000 of 3½ per cent bonds. Annual interest charges on this debt will amount to $394,625. For the year 1935, net earnings of the company, after depreciation and Federal taxes, available for interest, totaled $1,276,571 and for the twelve months ended June 30, 1936 such earnings were $1,224,839.

The new 3½ per cent bonds will have a sinking fund provision calling for annual payments of one-half of 1 per cent of the outstanding amount for the first 10 years, 1 per cent for the second 10 years and 2½ per cent for the final 10 years of the life of the bonds. The bonds are redeemable at prices ranging from 108 until October 1, 1937, to 100 after October 1, 1963.

Cumberland County Power & Light Company, which is a subsidiary of New England Public Service Company, is an operating public utility doing business entirely within the state of Maine, serving the city of Portland and surrounding territory.

VISIONS Of Optimist VIEWED

BUSINESS GAINS TO CONTINUE

By BROADAN WALL
Universal Service

New York, Oct. 19—In his present mood, the stock market optimist visions a most appealing future. "Nothing can stop the upswing of business and stocks," is the merry tune being sung.

With the presidential election just a fortnight away, politics has had no more effect pricewise than does a local election. Indeed, the feeling is that once the election is out of the way, business will gain a new momentum forward.

The feeling is that American economic revival is possible, regardless of such "extraneous factors" as the election and foreign developments. For this reason, the market participants have relegated to the realm of unimportance the monetary arrangements and revisions now being effected.

If cheapening of foreign currencies may cut income of corporations doing a large foreign business, why, the hope is increased volume of business will make up for the currency loss.

That the tariff-lowering movement which has suddenly gained such important adherents as France and Italy may injure American business is also interpreted as relatively unlikely. That the same tariff-lowering pressure is being exerted by the whole world against the United States is naturally likewise dismissed as impossible of success.

Nothing is given consideration today except bullishness.

Business statistics are employed to confirm the optimism—steel operations at a peak for six years, auto production mounting for the next season, electrical power consumption at an all-time peak, railway freight loadings at the top since 1930.

* * *

If the argument is made that a good deal of profit has accrued by reason of the big advance, the answer is made that such profits "cannot be taken" because of high taxes.

A perfect picture is thus presented for faith in the market and faith that higher prices are yet in store. It is the kind of an alluring picture which inevitably has produced sorrowful losses for the all-believing.

The U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates that approximately 30,936,000 persons were engaged in non-agricultural industries in May of this year. This compares with 26,310,000 in May, 1933, and 25,886,000 in May of 1929.

Exclusive of agriculture, employment has increased 4,637,000 since May, 1933.

The bars on the chart show the total non-agricultural employment for the three periods. The increase over 1933 is broken down into groups to show the relative increases of employment in the various industries.

Wall Street Sidelights

New York, Oct. 19—No let up in the heavy movement of foreign funds into New York for investment in American securities has taken place, it is learned in reliable quarters.

The proportions of the influx of such funds from abroad is emphasized by the fact that it exceeds the amount of money returning to Europe due to repatriation. London is underrated to be the principal contributing source, but it is believed that the total from that center is composed of both British and Continental funds; the latter having capital deposited in London for safekeeping and now coming here rather than returning home.

Erie September Net Is Forecast

Net income of Erie Railroad after all charges in September is believed to have virtually paralleled the $147,000 for August, the preceding month. Such a showing would lift Erie earnings for the first nine months of 1936 to around $723,000, equal to $1.50 a share on the $4 non cumulative first preferred stock. For the full year 1935 the road had net deficit of $1.75 a share on the first preferred stock, against a deficit of $1.25 on the first preferred in 1934. Erie's freight trafic currently is running 10 per cent above a year ago.

Capital Flowing Back to France

Conforming with the experience of other countries which have revalued their currencies, France's action has instituted a return of some of the capital which had left the country. The Bank of France statement, published recently, showed a substantial increase in private deposits to the highest total since July, 1935, together with indications of a material inflow of gold, while money in circulation contracted, although the latter by no significant amount. However, even more significant were the changes in the Bank of England statement, which showed a reduction in circulation of nearly 4½ million pounds sterling, the first important shrinkage in some time. It is recalled that the greatest share of the French capital flight was into sterling and had brought the bank's circulation figure to successive record heights over a period of months.

INVASION

Smelters Stake Claims

Fairbanks, Alaska, Oct. 19 (AP)—The big talk today in "Uncle Sam's attic" was about the entrance of two major American mining companies into the vast interior gold fields.

American Smelting and Refining Company secured control of 50 gold quarts claims near Fairbanks, and the United States Smelting Refining and Mining Company purchased the famous Big Eldorado creek, one of the largest placer gold creeks in the world.

The companies announced plans to begin winter operations immediately.

Alaska expects to send out $19,000,000 in gold this season, almost double the average season's clean-up and twice as much as the amount the United States paid for the territory 69 years ago.

The big mining companies are installing huge "gold boats" or dredges which are taking the place of individual prospectors.

One working near Fairbanks weighs 2000 tons, can dig down nearly 100 feet, handle between 6000 and 10,000 cubic yards of dirt daily and requires only five or six men to operate it.

R. M. O'Leane, manager of the Northern Commercial Company, predicted a production of $400,000 from the Hot Springs District near Nome.

Walter G. Fisher, one of the biggest individual holders of gold mines, said his cleanup thus far "is the best I have ever had."

CURRENT Trade FIGURES

UNDERSTATE RECOVERY

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUKEYSER
Universal Service

Current visible trade statistics somewhat understate the status of economic recovery in the United States.

There are two reasons for this. In the first place, with the bringing out of new automobile models next month, there is a natural tendency to postpone purchases of cars.

Secondly, with the great advance in political merchandising culminating on November 3, there is a disposition to hold back on postponable new commitments until the atmosphere has been clarified. Supplanting uncertainty with certainty will doubtless release certain projects where now there is a disposition to wait.

From my contacts with executives from coast to coast, I gather the impression that a London victory would be interpreted as a "go ahead" signal, resulting in a skyrocketing of confidence. On the other hand, in the event of re-election of the New Deal administration, gradually post-election realism would supplant current emotional appraisals. There doubtless, however, would be some further disposition to withhold decisions until the President disclosed his new program in January after Congress adjourns.

As re-employment and trade volume expand, men are tending rapidly to free their minds of the fallacies and delusions which blinded their vision during the depression psychosis. There is less interest than before in blind statistics that capitalism is decaying. The pessimists used to stress the disappearance of geographical frontiers, the flattening out of the curve of population growth, and the shriveling up of exports. There is increasing understanding that the new frontiers of science and invention will mark the progress of the future, and that economic stimulus can come from raising the living standards and quality of the home population instead of multiplying mere numbers.

As for exports, they naturally recover somewhat with world recovery.

The financial public has become realistic regarding the export possibility since the tri-party stabilization maneuvers have been made.

Unquestionably, the export trade will expand again, but in the future there may be a more critical attempt to limit exports to those for which foreign customers can offer quid pro quo. An important bloc of opinion holds that we should seek to develop foreign trade without foreign loans.

N. E. COUNCIL

McCarl to SPEAK IN Boston

By HUGH F. BRADSHAW

Interest in the twelfth annual conference of the New England Council was given a sharp forward push today with the announcement former U. S. Comptroller-General McCarl will address the opening session November 19.

This will mark the first public appearance of the former "watch dog" of the U. S. Treasury since leaving office and seems certain to attract a large and attendance.

John Buchanan, who recently completed a term as president of Investment Bankers Association of the businessmen to federal finance in the country, will head business and industrial interests, as well as the governors of the six New England states are planning a ten-flight gathering to open what promises to be the most important session of the council.

It is not for naught in looking following the Democratic landslide that business men are turning to their federal representatives in search of ways to remedy economic troubles brought on by months of spending power are indicated in the fact that the total of investment orders placed with the every banks and there is nothing in sight that would seem to cause a contraction or freezing of spending. Transactions in stock issues are not extensive, and commodities and mixed seem reluctant to benefit. Of the first named, furniture appears to be the most outstanding exception. Retail trade appears to be in full swing in addition.

Notebook: Higher steel prices for first quarter delivery is the word in informed State St circles . . . Predicted that this will be all along the line and all through the industry . . . Commercial Credit per share earnings for the full year are set at $5 which indicates to the enthusiasts a dividend of $3 per share . . . Office equipment makers are in high favor in some quarters . . . Where talk of much higher prices in the order of the day . . . Underwood Elliot Fisher is our favorite with probably another $10 a share for the full year the reason . . . Since a payment of at least $3 per share would likely . . .

The stock market as displayed signs of awakening. As an organized Saturday prone in many recollections seem high enough since they were established. Others and dormant to a great extent much of the stocks news and dull pated. The speculation indulged here from time to time together with the easing bank rate and money groups appear to be in favor of mediums for current purchases. Rails are a possibility as they are not likely to move as a unit from here on. Some divisions of the railroad list are bound to lag others and we should expect a mixed appearance as upgrade are brought into line.

Boardroom Briefs: Building construction issues are receiving more attention . . . For the present bullishness is of the long sort and purchases are made with the idea of holding over a period of months . . . However, this is the sort of a situation we like . . . While it requires patience it also means the establishment of good bases at close to bottom levels . . .

Which is the policy that payseral speculative dividends later on . . . Coppers have had a smart move in the last week and we would not force the issue in adding new purchases at these levels.

Labor's False Friends

ORGANIZED LABOR in the United States should heed the counsel given it by Governor Landon in Toledo.

Governor Landon reminds labor that it has been strong because it has been independent of politics. It has maintained its influence by advancing its aims without regard to political objectives.

He gives new force to the SOUND AMERICAN PRINCIPLES the late Samuel Gompers espoused throughout a lifetime dedicated to the welfare of workers.

Of Mr. Gompers, Governor Landon said:

"He declared that once organized labor engaged in party politics, and once it permitted itself to be affiliated with the Government, it would lose its independence and power to promote the interests of the working people effectively. He foresaw that affiliation with the Government WOULD BECOME DOMINATION BY THE GOVERNMENT."

ORGANIZED LABOR has been a POWER FOR THE GOOD OF ALL in America, in pursuing the course identifying its efforts for more than fifty years. It will continue to be a constructive force in the nation's affairs only so long as it continues that course.

Governor Landon COMMENDS labor for what it has done in the past.

He believes labor has been helpful, that it has accomplished good things for the nation, that it has been wisely directed by patriotic leaders.

Governor Landon DEFENDS EVERY RIGHT labor has established in its long struggle for human betterment.

What more could labor ask for any HONEST AMERICAN CITIZEN than the pledge Mr. Landon gave in Toledo:

"I am absolutely opposed to any infringement on the rights of labor to organize, and any curtailment of the right of freedom of assembly."

LABOR will not find this assurance in any country where workers have yielded to the kind of program the New Deal proposes for labor in America.

Wherever labor has been absorbed by political groups, it has been enslaved by those groups. That will happen in the United States if the FALSE FRIENDS OF LABOR ever succeed in their purpose of reducing the working classes to the serfdom of political tyranny.

WPA Threatens "Strike"

WITH the national election only a fortnight away, the Roosevelt Administration faces the threat of a "sit down strike" of WPA workers in various parts of the country.

The Workers' Alliance, an organization claiming members on WPA projects in 43 States, proposes to place before the President a formal demand for an immediate boost of 20 per cent in wages and other concessions. If he refuses, the "strike" will follow, leaders say.

New Deal attempts to make political prey of relief jobs have been notorious in this campaign, with Democratic leaders openly appealing for WPA support.

Now, apparently, groups of these workers want something in return from the national administration. In other words, the chickens may be coming home to roost.

Crossing Party Lines

THOUSANDS of voters who will mark their ballots for Governor Landon, the Republican presidential candidate, are registered as Democrats and will continue to be Democrats.

They have the privilege of voting for Mr. Landon, without affecting registration in the party of their choice.

The citizen becomes AN AMERICAN VOTER, when he enters the polling place in a general election.

If the party he supports has not offered candidates meriting his approval, it is his right to vote for other candidates he does approve.

The crossing of the "party line" is the privilege of every American voter, and no right of party affiliation is surrendered by the voter who exercises the privilege.

An Incredible Question

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT is making some incredible statements these days—incredible even to his followers.

In his Denver speech of October 13 the President said:

"Are you willing to turn America over to those who in the past have shut their eyes to the problems of this nation?"

It is not the Republican Party and its straightforward candidate that are today shutting their eyes to "the problems of the nation."

It is, rather, President Roosevelt and his New Dealers who are trying to SHUT THE EYES of the voters to the real problems that confront them, one of the chief of which is TAX-EROSION ON THE POCKETBOOK.

Alice in Blunderland

By Nelson Harding

The patient Donkey balks at last
And throws the crackpot "knight,"
Who was "enlisted for the war"
When no "war" was in sight!

Yes, there he goes into the ditch,
Soon we will hear the splash
Of "phony" armour, stagey sword
And all that load of trash!

Meet Mr. Keynes!

The Human Side of the News

By Edwin C. Hill

Edwin C. Hill

Mr. American, meet Mr. John Maynard Keynes! The name is pronounced "Kines." Governor Landon, introducing him in his Chicago speech, declined to mention the name, stating:

"The simple and amazing theory behind this spending (by the Roosevelt regime) was sold to the administration by a British economist, of course, as a foreigner, he found ardent followers in this administration, although he had none in his own government."

Who is John Maynard Keynes? He is an Englishman, 53 years old at the present, a Cambridge man and son of an economist. After having followed his writings and his career, I would describe him as the English Tugwell, and I gather that our own right-hand economist of the President got many of his ideas from Mr. Keynes.

Tugwell once said, "Everybody is wrong but me," and he made a mistake there. He should have said "Me and Keynes." Dr. Tugwell is a Columbia professor, and Dr. Keynes is a Cambridge professor. Keynes broke into the limelight in 1919 with his book, "The Economic Consequences of the Peace," and since then has been making a desperate effort to keep in it perpetually.

FOE OF WILSON

To him, the American Woodrow Wilson was a "blind and deaf Don Quixote" . . . The President was like a non-conformist minister, he said. "His thought and his temperament were essentially theological, not intellectual, with all the strength and the weakness of that manner of thought, feeling and expression."

In 1924, Keynes, feeling the urge of another book, came out with "Monetary Reform." Discussing this work the eminent and practical student of finance, Alexander Dana Noyes, spoke of Keynes' "seriously close approach to the attitude, not at all unfamiliar in dogmatic economists of approaching well-known facts with the virtual assumption that, if they do not agree with his theories, then they are not facts and should be ignored."

How one our Dr. Tugwell, who could not see or would not face the facts that destruction of crops and livestock meant destruction of jobs at a time when unemployment was the most serious of our problems! How like Dr. Tugwell's immediate rush to transplant the drouth victims last summer without considering whether or not they wanted to be taken from their homes!

To get back to Keynes. In 1924, he knew little about the American industrial and financial scene, yet he knew how to fix it. Of this, Mr. Noyes said:

"A writer who is applying to a foreign country (the United States), with whose financial system he is indifferently familiar, a set of preconceived theories is always likely to make strange work of his exposition. Mr. Keynes achieves that distinction."

Mr. Keynes knew this much about America in 1924; he knew we had financed the war besides being the decisive military factor in it. But he was one of the first to oppose payment to us of the billions of dollars which we loaned, many of them after the Armistice and which we are whining for still. He calls us "usurer" and other such pleasant names, and never lost a chance to say that we were not to be paid.

AVOIDS WAR DEBTS

After a visit to Russia, he was advocating, in 1925, the foreign of birth control and reform of the marriage laws into political platforms. Finally on December 20, 1923, he addressed an open letter to President Roosevelt, through the newspapers, in which he set out to advise the President on how the country should be operated under the New Deal.

Devaluation of the dollar, the WPA, approval of AAA and the reduction of interest on savings deposits to a point where they would be just one per cent — all were contained in this letter.

Senator James Hamilton Lewis characterized the letter as one of "poor bakers." Senator McKellar, of Tennessee, asked if there was any suggestion of paying the war debts in the letter. To this, Senator Lewis replied:

"That's the subject he carefully avoids."

But Mr. Keynes came over and, according to the Hitler press, he "captivated Mr. Roosevelt."

Lewis and McKellar are Democrats and they had to stand for the captivation and vote for the New Deal program, conceived by a foreigner, in whom the American liberal, Henry Hazlitt, has characterized as a "smart-aleck."

Yes, Mr. American, meet Mr. Keynes.

New York Day by Day

New York, Oct. 19—Diary: A hail from Valentine Williams, the London tale writer. And a posy from Bob Ripley and a snapshot of Bob Ripley in N. Y. and El Paso. Also notes from Mrs. Harry Houdini and Cole Porter. And Ethel Roche came in a moment to say good bye against her seasonal journey to Palm Beach.

So talking to Harry Burton's executive, Ed Hawley, who has cached in a capable head as much literary information as any one I know. And word I had been given honorary membership, formerly held by the late Jerome K. Jerome, in the International Mark Twain Society.

Dinner at the Colony and carriaged Dick Berlin and Nancy White through the park and to see the feather-like tracery of Washington Bridge in the moonshine. Then to see the last act of "White Horse Tavern" again, a spectacle I liked as well as "The Great Waltz."

Interesting observation: Art Kudner, an ace advertising man, who once ran a country jake newspaper in a Michigan burg, now has a twin-motored plane to commute from his offices in Rockfeller Center for week ends at his ranch in New Mexico, Heigh ho!

Study in wistfulness: Marc Connelly gazing at a window display of imported hair brushes in a Madison avenue shop.

George Marshall, the Washington laundry tycoon, was the chief backer for the new million dollar auto racing course, the Roosevelt Raceway, at Westbury, L. I., near the scene of the Vanderbilt Cup races. And thus the vivacious fellow who has been upholding the Broadway playboy traditions the past few years emerges with the label of sportsman.

Marshall, no relation but a lookalike of Herbert Marshall, has a flair for speed whether he is making the rounds of the night clubs or throwing one of his dawn breakfasts. The venture will be a new avenue for his talents.

The passing of Father Joe McGrath, who shepherded derelicts along the water front for 30 years, recalls a story of the old Park Row days and Father McGrath's kindly restraint. It involves perhaps the only story Arthur McKeough, the magazine editor, ever faked. It was during his cubship on the old Evening Sun.

Came Labor Day, 1912, as barren of news as usual. McKeough appeared at the city desk and reported he had seen McGrath rescue a florist's wife at the Staten Island beach after she had gone down twice—himself fully clothed. McKeogh was due to get his space writer and hammer it out for a column. Little faint-voiced Tommy Dinnadie, the city editor, who had fathered Richard Harding Davis, Arthur Brisbane, Irvin Cobb and Will Irwin, ordered the story top the column Page 1 for early editions and thus it stayed the interminable day.

All the while the cub trembled at his foolhardy temerity, even as he writhed at the compliments of the staff on his "exclusive." The fake was hatched this wise, on the preceding day. McKeogh and the F. Hopkinson Smith financial writer, had met Father McGrath on the beach with a florist and his wife. On the way home McKeogh's fictional sense began feeling its oats and the tale was born.

The only truth was the identities of the cast. And McKeogh took the precaution to end the story by stating Father McGrath refused to be interviewed. Father McGrath, an understanding soul, took the hint.

And when other reporters flocked to him to confirm the yarn, he told them nothing but the truth. "I wouldn't know a thing about it!"

The Marry-Go-Round

By Helen Rowland

Does the successful revival of "Romeo and Juliet" mean the renaissance of romance? Does it signify that the last trace of the hard-boiled jazz era has disappeared, and that love-making, as an art, is coming back into vogue again?

There was a time when the cool-headed young women and cool-hearted young men who now applaud Romeo's florid speeches would have thought his line pretty "sappy." In fact, even now, any modern man who indulged in such fulsome grandiloquence would be gently told to see a psychoanalyst.

Helen Rowland

But in Romeo's day, his "line" was good. Moreover, it was new; and he was probably the only man except Adam who ever displayed any originality in his love-making. And, however sappy and flowery it may sound to the would-be young cynic, it is at least beautiful and spontaneous.

WHAT WE'VE MISSED

Beautiful! That's what everybody, especially every woman, wants love and courtship to be. And that's what we've missed all these years, when the canned lines of nicknames, stock phrases and overdone flattery were the fashion. No man made love in the real sense of the word; he simply pressed a little automat somewhere in the back of his mind and out popped a stock compliment or a sweet nothing, which was about as convincing as the hand-painted smile on a chorine's face.

One man's line was so much like another's that if a girl closed her eyes she could scarcely tell whether it was this year's bright hope or last year's sweet memory who was clasping her in his arms and running up her hair. They all sounded like graduates from the same Correspondence School of Courtship.

But, lovemaking, to be effective simply MUST have a dash of rose in it and a soupçon of sincerity, spontaneity and sentiment. No matter how cynical she may appear, every woman is a sentimentalist under the skin. Don't let her fool you. And if she has had a beautiful courtship, she feels that life owes her very little else. She had by one person—the glamour which colors everything that follows, however merrily we may turn out.

ROMEO'S COMEBACK

Almost any girl would joyfully exchange all the petting parties in the world for a little genuine tenderness, a frank and ardent avowal of love, a rapturous and convincing kiss and one spontaneous and original remark.

That's why Romeo, after all these years in the discard, has been able to make a comeback; and why not only the Shakespeare lovers and the intelligentsia are flocking to see him, but young men and women from every walk in life. That's why Romeo, for the first time since my grandmother was a sweet sapphire, is being taken seriously and listened to with understanding.

That's That

By Bruce Gustin

President Roosevelt's Denver and Omaha speeches were addressed mainly to farmers. At Omaha, he complained that the Republican farm program would subsidize unlimited farm production and result in piling up surpluses. He thought that would be a terrible thing. But by the time he got to Denver, he was talking of a program which would result in more overproduction than this country ever has seen.

At Denver, President Roosevelt had another of those "Green Pastures Beside Still Waters" dreams. He was going to have every stream on the Missouri river watersheds working for all the people of all the States through which they run. He talked of putting to work "every ounce and every gallon of water that flows from the heavens and the hills before it makes its way down to the Gulf of Mexico." But he didn't explain how this enormous expansion of irrigated acreage could be achieved without increasing farm production and piling up the very surpluses which he claims are poison to farm prosperity.

There was another contrast between the President's Omaha and Denver speeches which Democrats of Nebraska and Colorado but of every other State could not miss. At Omaha, he pleaded with the Democrats of Nebraska to walk out on their own candidate for the United States Senate and vote for George W. Norris, a Republican, who is running as an independent. But when he came to Denver he didn't have a word to say publicly in behalf of any candidate except himself. He did not hesitate to boost Norris in Nebraska, but he wouldn't say a word in Denver in support of the Democratic State ticket in Colorado.

In his Denver speech, President Roosevelt defended New Deal spending and squandering which have boosted the national debt to the highest figure in the peace time history of this or any other nation. "Of course, we spend money," he said. "It went to pay needy men and women without jobs to work, and to buy materials, processing of which put other men and women to work." That is only a part of story.

If all the New Deal expenditures for relief had been made for the relief of the distressed and the needy, there would be no complaint. Who were they? The $4,880,000,000 which Governor Landon is denouncing so vigorously and which has so increased the taxpayers is the fact that so much of this relief money has been used to build up a political machine.

Harry Hopkins, WPA administrator, has issued a statistical tabulation showing WPA expenditures in a number of states, together with the total number of relief and the number of administrative employes, up to and including August 31. You can safely figure that all these administrative employes are political appointees. They were not taken from the relief rolls. People who were on the relief lists could have handled virtually all these administrative positions. But the men and women who landed the administrative posts were taken from the political lists as a reward for past and future political service.

The Hopkins table is intended to show that administrative costs of the WPA have not been excessive. In a list of 19 Western and Southern states, they range from 4.1 per cent in Colorado up to 8.6 per cent in Montana. While the table gives the number of administrative employes in each state, it does not give the number of actual workers employed on WPA projects. So no comparison can be made between the average amount received by the workers on relief rolls from relief and the administrative job-holders who were taken from the politicians. But every WPA worker knows he is paid a whole lot less than the political jobholder who bosses him is getting.

In spite of all the billions the New Dealers have spent for relief and in the guise of relief they are only nearly half through of the unemployment problem than when they started. As Governor Landon pointed out at Cleveland, the present Administration doesn't know how many unemployed people there are in the United States. And he even went so far as to charge the New Dealers do not even know how many people are on relief

The Woman Voter

By Mrs. Kin Hubbard

It is a far cry to the American women of the twentieth century from the pioneer American women whose indomitable courage and fortitude were a strength to their men as they crossed the wilderness in covered wagons to rear families through years of hardship and struggle. Small wonder that the descendants of these women who peopled the West have a heritage that today is manifested in meeting adversity with the same courage that characterized the early settlers.

Drouth, dust storms, and the ploughing under of crops and the slaughter of cattle by New Deal Brain Trusters have today wrought hardships on the women of the Middle West that paralleled their hardships to those endured by the early pioneer women. The comfort, the security and the conveniences of farm life have been swept away as if by magic and instead there is regimentation, famine and the dole.

The farmer's wife knows to her sorrow the definition of the words "the Economy of Scarcity," pet policy emanating from New Deal headquarters at Washington.

The woman of the farm is characteristically "thrifty" and economical and on her falls the heavy burden of trying to keep the home and feed the hungry mouths of her family fronts larder that the AAA has depleted, if not utterly destroyed.

Governor Landon has spent his life in the Prairie States where seemingly summer suns and drouth spell disaster.

He knows the futility and waste of the crop-control decrees of the New Deal.

But his position as Chief Executive of the state of Kansas has also taught him the philosophy of the professional woman, the lawyer, the doctor, the business woman who is suffering in many instances from New Deal regimentation and competition, as well as the ever-increasing burden of taxes.

The best that the pioneer woman could do was to stand shoulder to shoulder with her husband in fighting the Indians, in swinging with him the axe that cleared them for planting.

Suffering has given the woman of today the power to vote.

In the coming election she has a chance to demonstrate that she is of the same strong character and courage and far-sighted mentality as her grandmother and her grandmother's grandmother.

Whether in the home or in business, women know the sequel to stories of waste, extravagance and debt.

It is the same in the city as in the country, in the east as in the west, the north, or the south.

She is the one who is bearing the brunt of today's false idea of economy and she has the power to answer it at the polls WITH A VOTE FOR LANDON AND KNOX.
